Mitterrand Proposes Talks on EC Charter

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

PARIS — President François Mitterrand called Thursday for a renegotiation of the constitution of the European Community and suggested that those not interested, a clear reference to Britain, could

The aim, he said, would be to work toward true European unity and end the stagnation that has characterized the community.

According to Mr. Mitterrand. the general strengthening of the European Community's constitution, known as the Treaty of Rome, would expand cooperation in the areas of education, security, combatting terrorism and politics. In a speech before the European Parliament in Strasbourg, Mr. Mitterrand proposed projects in the areas of electronics, space, transportation and communications

Other European heads of gov-crament will be expected to resound to Mr. Mitterrand's initiative at the summit meeting of the EC countries at Fontainebleau in late June.

The meeting will also attempt to come to grips with the hudgetary issue that has debilitated the community for more than a year. Britain maintains it must get almost as much back from the community finances as it puts in, while the other nine members have been unwilling to return as much money as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has demanded. If the budget dispute remains unresolved after the Fontainebleau meeting, it now appears possible that the other members of the community might move ahead toward strengthening the European Community without Britain.

Iran F-4 Attacks Tanker, Is Chased by Saudi Jets piled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON - An Iranian fighter-bomber attacked a Liberian-registered tanker in the western Gulf on Thursday, and first reports said it was sinking, the U.S. State Department said. The State De-partment added that Saudi planes chased the attacking aircraft. The State Department spokesman, John Hughes, said he was not aware that the Saudi planes had made any contact with the Iranian aircraft, a U.S.-built F-4 Phantom. The United States operates four Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) planes in eastern Saudi Arabia. The planes can moninr air activity over a wide area.

Iraq said earlier Thursday that its jets had hit two "large enemy targets," its usual term for shipping south of Iran's main oil terminal at Kharg Island in the northeastern Gulf.

All three reported attacks took million of the amount approved for Mitterrand's aides as a major statement. It committed France to seek tain the Iran-Iraq war after 44 states from becoming involved.

They were the first air strikes against the waterway's shipping since a Panamanian-registered merchant ship was reported sunk ton Chemical Venture, Reuters reby a missile and that four ships were steaming in its assistance. Reports conflicted as to whether the tanker was in Saudi or international waters. The sources quoted by Reuters said the tanker was apparently in Saudi waters at the time of the attack, about 50 miles northeast of the main Saudi oil terminal of Ras Tanura. The Chemical Venture, apparently empty and due in Kuwait Thursday to pick up a load of naphtha, a refined petroleum product, sent out a distress signal at 4:55 P.M., the sources added.

United Press International said that in London, Lloyds said shippers had reported seeing two Phan-toms and that the Chemical Venture was hit by a rocket fired by one of them as the tanker sailed in in-ternational waters 21 miles northeast of the Saudi port of Jubail, 80 miles north of Bahrain. A spokesman for the Dutch ship-

None of the crewmen were burt in the attack according to these reports,

The shipping sources quoted by Reuters said the position and the pattern of the attack on the Chemical Venture were similar to those carried out on one Saudi and two Kuwaiti tankers on the western side of the Gulf last week.

Those were the first reported Iranian attacks on neutral shipping in the Gulf and raised fears of a widening of the war. Saudi Arabia and its conservative Gulf allies blamed the attacks on Iran.

Syrian radio said President Ali Khamenel of Iran had agreed not to expand Iran's aerial war over the place as talks were held between Gulf after receiving a message from Iran and Syria. U.S. Says Parents' Smoking Threatens Children's Health

WASHINGTON - The U.S. surgeon general, C. Everett Koop, has declared that "cigarette smoking can make a significant, measurable contribution to the level of indoor air pellution." Citing possible health hazards in children exposed in their parents' smoke, he irrged parents to stop smoking.

At a news conference Wednesday on the 17th report by a surgeon general on "The Health Consequences of Smoking." Dr. Koop said cigarettes were the country's "most important individual health risk," responsible for more premature deaths and disability than any other known agent. Dr. Koop this week set a nationwide health goal of a "smoke-free society by the year 2000," which he said should be achieved largely by educational efforts in the private sector.

Dr. Koop said the number of scientific studies showing that nonsmokers can be affected by cigarette smoke is growing. He said there was evidence that children of smokers appear to have "small, but measurable, differences" in lung function and a greater susceptibility to respiratory problems, including bronchitis and pneumonia, Health officials said the new report was the first to provide a detailed biological explanation of how eigarette smoke may damage lung cells. The evidence suggests that exposure to eigarette smoke may inflame the lungs and cause an influx of infection-fighting cells that produce an enzyme that can degrade lung tissue.

More than 10 million Americans are affected by chronic lung disease, which often causes debilitating shortness of breath and accounts for more than 500,000 hospital admissions annually, Dr.

Weinberger Discloses U.S. Navy Has Bought Israeli Drone Aircraft

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of disclosed that the navy has bought small, remote-controlled pilotless aircraft from Israel.

He also disclosed Wednesday that the U.S. military had accepted Israeli offers of medical assistance in at least two cases. One involved an injured marine guard in Tel Aviv, the other the pregnant wife of an air force sergeant in Turkey.
In a news conference with the American Jewish Press Association, Mr. Weinberger enumerated instances of U.S. military cooperation with Israel as he continued an effort of recent months to demonstrate that he does not hold anti-Israeli views. The defense secretary has been attacked by Jewish groups here and by senior Israeli officials in Jerusalem for fostering what they consider to be pro-Arab and anti-Israeli military policies.

RLD BRIEF Fund-Raisers Providing Big Republican Donors An Attentive Official Ear

By Thomas B. Edsall and Helen Dewar Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON -- Officials of Republican fund-raising commitites have revealed that they have a system for interceding with the federal government on behalf of major campaign contributors.
This includes special "casework-

Senator Richard G. Lugar, an Indiana Republican who is chair-

Mr. Greener said the Republican National Committee maintains a small staff of two to four "Eagle representatives" who take care of members of the "Eagles Club," those who contribute $10,000 or more a year, and that other staff members occasionally perform services for contributors, although none is assigned to do so full time.

He emphasized that donors get no special treatment, although he acknowledged that direct access to an assistant secretary of the energy or Treasury departments, for example, is not available to most taxpayers. He said that most requests from donors is for information.

New Jersey Becomes Key Primary For Mondale and Hart Campaigns

But New Jersey is important to the candidates for different reasons, according to officials of the two campaigns. These differences arise from the contrasting plans adopted by the Mondale and Hart organizations for the final round of maries on June 5 in New Jersey, California, West Virginia, New Mexico and South Dakota.

In Mr. Mondale's survival strategy, New Jersey is absolutely central His advisers are laying the groundwork for a major effort in California, too, if the polls continme to look good there, but their approach has one overriding prinple: No resources are to be diverted to California or any other state if doing so would jeopardize the

Mr. Hart's polls show a somewhat tighter race. The poll standings in the last few days before the primaries will play a major role in determining the effort Mr. Mondale makes in California

"If we're down by three points in New Jersey, we're pouring every-thing into New Jersey," said a Mondale adviser. "But if we should be up by 15 points, we would go for a double-win strategy and pull our media down in New Jersey and pour resources into California."

In addition to figuring promi-nently in the battle over delegates and momentum, the New Jersey campaign has also cast light on the overall approach Mr. Mondale is taking to salvage a nomination that once seemed in the bag.

On the level of public performance, it involves a revival of the former vice president's "fighting Fritz" persona. In New Jersey on Monday and Transfers him to the June 5 primaries with about 1,750 of the 1,967 delegates needed for nomination.

A cap of about 3 percent on More Backing Is Sought

By Michael Getler

Washington Past Service
LONDON — The British goverument is pushing for a tough statement on combatting terrorism when leaders of seven major industrial nations gather for a summit meeting here in two weeks.

The British effort, which is supported by the United States, is simed at reinforcing adherence to the 1961 Vienna Convention governing diplomatic immunity and at achieving a more unified stance in taking action against countries that abuse that convention.

Sources said that while there might also be some private agreements to intensify exchange of intelligence information and cooperation on border controls, it may be difficult to get agreement on the language of a public statement by all seven leaders.

For example, a source said, the fact that the Italians have important commercial links with Libya could limit their participation. A London policewoman was shot from inside the Libyan Embassy here last month.

The prevailing view is that the host government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will get the statement. Despite the lack of visihle victories against terrorists. "a concerted effort by leading countries can make a difference," a diplomat said. Political and foreign policy issues, rather than economics, are expected to play a central role in the June 7-9 meeting, according to sources. This is because it comes at time when relations between Washington and Moscow are virtually nonexistent and when the war between Iran and Iraq has escalated into attacks by both countries on oil tankers in the Gulf. The question of the West's relations with Moscow is especially sensitive, sources said. On the one hand, they said, there is clearly con-cern and edginess in Europe and elsewhere about the badly deteriorated relations and the breaking off by Moscow of arms control talks.

On the other hand, the sources said the view within the Thatcher government and other governments is that the Soviet leadership has become withdrawn, unresponsive and unimaginative. By this version, relations are hardening, rather than softening, Western attitudes toward the Soviet Union.

British sources said the prime minister felt strongly that enough overtures and concessions had been made to the Soviet Union and that it was time Moscow responded. She reportedly wants to avoid a split among the seven nations on the point and will press for a firm and united approach. The matter needs to be handled carefully, however, because of the U.S. election. The sources said President Ronald Reagan undoubtedly would be questioned privately and at length about where things stood with Moscow.

But the leaders, especially likeminded ones on security issues such as Mrs. Thatcher, Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany and President François Mitterrand of France, are unlikely to put Mr. Reagan under pressure.

The important thing, sources said, is that the Russians should not be allowed to claim that the West is paralyzed oo relations with Moscow because of election-year considerations.

Even on the question of high U.S. interest rates and deficits. which concern many countries and on which Mr. Reagan is certain to be pressed in private sessions, British sources said it was unlikely that Mr. Reagan would be challenged

Mrs. Thatcher wants the meeting to appear successful, a source said helping to maintain economic expansion, avoid inflation and avoid public disputes.

The seven nations participating will be Britain, France, the United States, Italy, West Germany, Japan and Canada.

New U.S. Missile Complex Is Planned Alaskan Base Is Part of Network to Block Nuclear Attack

By Wayne Biddle

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army plans to build a rocketlaunching base in the Aleutian Islands for monitoring Soviet missile tests as part of its burgeoning effort to develop weapons that can destroy enemy nuclear missiles in Money for the base, to be built on Shemya Island at the western end of the Alaskan chain, was noted in one paragraph of a 196-page report issued Mooday by the House Armed Services Committee. on military construction authorization for fiscal year 1985.

The committee approved an army request of $12.8 million for its Ballistic Missile Defense Systems Command to begin work on the remote island next year.

The report described the base only as a "guided missile facility," but a committee source said the army intended to build a complete missile launch complex, including launch pads, missile storage and assembly buildings and radar sites. If funding is approved by Congress as expected, construction would start oext May.

An army spokesman said the ultimate purpose of the Shemya facility was a military secret, adding anti-ballistic missile system.

sified project." A military expert familiar with the project said the sounding rock-ets, which are relatively small boosters that can carry instruments briefly to the edge of the Earth's atmosphere, would be used to monitor Soviet nuclear warhead tests. By measuring the heat given off by warheads as they re-enter the atmosphere, for example, Pentagon researchers can learn how to identify the warheads and discriminate between them and decoys or other harmless objects.

The army facility would serve a different purpose than a powerful radar station the air force has operated on Shemya Island since 1977. The radar, known by the code name Cobra Dane, is used for surveillance of Soviet military activiiles on the Kamchatka Peninsula and tracking of objects in space. Neither congressional nor Pentagou sources indicated any immediate army intentions to expand the proposed Shemya facility into such a full-fledged test site, which would require new negotiations with the Soviet Union under the treaty.

A Congressional Budget Office study released Wednesday by Senator Larry Pressler, Republican of South Dakota, found that the Reagan administration's research into defense against enemy missiles would consume at least 16 percent of all Pentagon research and development funds by 1989. Containing the Gulf War President Reagan, in his news conference Tuesday, served the useful purpose of switching the international focus away from the prospects of U.S. military intervention in the Gulf and toward the possibilities of diplomacy to contain and eventually end the Iran-Iraq war. His overall effect was calming. The Amer-ican interest in keeping the Gulf open and in diminishing the conflict was asserted, and there were no rough or provocauve edges.

Iraq's desperate president. Saddam Hussein, threatens anew to attack Iran's oil-loading facilities at Kharg Island. At the same time, the pace of Arab diplomatic activity is picking up. Although the conservative Gulf states all support Iraq and fear revolutionary Iran, they are showing a certain welcome awareness that Iran has legitimate interests 100. The Saudis, who subsidize the Iraqis, sent an emissary to the Syrians, whom they also subsidize and who hate the Iraqis. The Syrians then sent a mission to their friends in Tehran. the enemies of their Iraqi enemies. The immediate purpose is to diminish the war's alarming tendency to overflow its military bounds. The deeper purpose is to promote a settlement between Iraq, which is eager for one, and Iran, which so far is not. What stands between the two governments and a negotiating table is Iran's demand that Saddam Hussein, who started the war and escalated it into attacks on Gulf shipping, be replaced first. He hangs on. Iraq's Arab friends are deathly afraid of Iran's arms and fundamentalist ideas, but the closer the war gets to them, the more some of them are coming to feel they are paying heavily to keep one erratic man in power.

The diplomatic activity needs to be stepped up. In respect to the battle at sea, the Arab countries that protest Iran's latest strikes at ships ought to find more effective ways to protest Irao's as well. In respect to the battle on land, where Iran is now in the position of invading Iraq, the countries that send military equipment to Iran or buy its oil should be pressed to cut back in both departments.

Similarly, it is intolerable that the French continue to sell Iraq the wespons it uses against international shipping. Further open-ings to manipulate the subsidies that the Saudis and other Gulf Araos pay to their poorer brothers can be sought.

No single coordinated diplomatic plan seems to be in the offing. To wait for one, however, is to risk the possibility that the war will get even more out of hand. Governments must do what they can - now.

The Tough Talk Only Closed Soviet Ears

B OSTON — To those watching from outside, the torment of Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner is many things. It is a human tragedy: the destruction of two great spirits. It is a brutal example of Soviet indifference to the elaims of humanity. And it is telling evidence of the bankruptcy of Ronald Reagan's policy toward the Soviet Union.

A central aim of Mr. Reagan's presidency has been to increase American influence over Soviet behavior. His means to that end were a huge arms buildup, tough anti-Soviet rhetoric and a militarized diplomacy. The results are now in. After three years of the Reagan policy, U.S. influence over Soviet behavior has been reduced to near zero. And if we look at the problem of Soviet human rights, symbolized in the Sakharov case, we can see the folly that has led to American impotence.

Ten years ago the Soviet Union expelled the most powerful internal critic of its system, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, allowing him to speak and write and prosper in the West. If he were still there now and the tensions between him and the state were reaching a climax, would he be allowed out? Certainly not; in all likelihood he would be imprisoned.

The reason Mr. Solzhenitsyn was allowed out in 1974 was not that gentler souls ran the Soviet Union then. The KGB was just as intolerant of dissent. But he and a great many other dissidents left in those years.

No, the reason is plain. Those were the years when Richard Nixon and Heary Kissinger were following a policy of detente with the Soviet Union. Soviet leaders saw important interests at stake in the relationship with the United States:

By Anthony Lewis

trade, for example. And to maintain that rela-tionship they knew they had to pay a price in their treatment of dissidents.

Soviet behavior in the human rights field is to a significant extent a function of overall relations with the West, especially with the United States. It is a matter of politics, not humanity. When relations offer incentives, Soviet leaders impose certain restraints on the KGB.

Today, by all indications, the KGB is operating against dissidents and Jewish "refuseniks" without any constraints deriving from the U.S. relationship. Internally, the quick changes in leadership have evidently left a degree of insecurity that makes it even harder to show generosity toward a Sakharov — even if there were a recog-nition of the fact that generosity would actually improve the Soviet position in the world.

There is a lesson in all this, one that, in candor, those of us who for years have emphasized human rights have not adequately understood.

Human rights policy, when the U.S. Congress began to give it form a dozen years ago, arose from several quite different sources. There was a reaction against Mr. Kissinger's realpolitik: his disregard for human values in places such as Chile. There was an extension abroad of American concern for civil rights at home. And there was a desire by some people to use the human rights issue as a stick to beat the Russians. The lesson of these years is that using human rights as a political weapon against the Russians reduces the chances of helping the dissidents and those who wish to emigrate. Frontal political challenge just makes the Soviet system close up. Mr. Kissinger, for all the inhumanity on his record, dealt wisely with the Russians. His idea was to weave a web of interests, to give them incentives for restraint. Of course he oversold détente, and overreacted when it failed to restrain Soviet adventures in the Third World. He paid dearly in the hatred of the extreme right, but its policy has made him look good. Under Ronald Reagan, the rightist conception of dealing with the Soviet Union has had its day. The tactics have been bluster, threat and insult. When an American president talks of a Soviet "evil empire," the Russians are inevitably going to be resentful, angry, defiant.

Under those circumstances Western pressure on behalf of a Sakharov cannot work; for a Soviet leader to look as if he mere assisted work is it.

Soviet leader to look as if he were giving way to it would be an obscenity.

The bitterest part of it for Andrei Sakharov must be not his own suffering or even his wife's. It is that the Reagan administration's policy has greatly increased the danger that he has fought for so many years: the danger of an escalating arms race and an ever-greater risk of nuclear war.

For the policy has not only worsened human rights conditions in the Soviet Union; it has stimulated a counter-buildup in weapons and a cold refusal to negotiate on American terms.

It is a policy so counterproductive that one wonders how any president could press on with it in the face of demonstrated harm to American interests. But that assumes rationality, and the assumption is wrong. The policy is based on ideology, not reason, and there is no limit to the self-indulgence of ideology.

Every Deficit Chip Counts

reduce future budget deficits accomplish more than anyone expected at the start of 1984. But they still amount only to a "down payment" on hard fiscal choices still to be made. If nothing more is done, the deficit three years from now could still exceed $200 billion. The sooner Congress acts the better, and it could do even a little more this year. Additional trimming will be possible in reconciling the two bills. The Senate bill, which now has President Reagan's approval, would reduce the prospective deficits by $142 billion over three years. The substantially different House bill would cut them by $182 billion. Even these numbers can be misleading; they do not represent cuts in the current deficit, only cuts from what future deficits would be if Mr. Reagan's budget were adopted as is.

Both bills would raise $48 billion more in tax increases. The House would do so by cutting the growth of military spending more sharply. The Senate would take more out of social programs. The net saving could be greater if the final bill combines the larger spending cuts and the larger tax increases of each.

On the spending side, by far the biggest savings in both bills are in defense, as they must be. The Senate would cut almost half of Mr. Reagan's proposed defense increase, to recover $40 billion over three years; the House

The bills in the U.S. Senate and House to cuts three-fourths, to save $96 billion. Why not split the difference?

The Senate would also save $9 billion on Medicare with a freeze on physicians' fees. The House, which rejects that measure, would save SI billion. The Senate also freezes all discretionary spending for nondefense items for a year, and thereafter permiss them to rise only at the presumed rate of inflation. The House properly prefers to be less arbitrary and rejects these relatively small savings.

As for new taxes, the two bills differ in bundreds of ways. The most contentious proposals are the House's sound desire to stop expanding tax-exempt bond financing for "industrial development" and the Senate's reasonable cutback on real estate tax breaks enacted in 1981. The House would tax cigarettes and liquor more heavily than the Senate.

The need for still more substantial action on both spending and taxes is elear. The deficits are stimulating enormous economic expansion, building pressure in the credit markets and pushing up interest rates.

la his fourth year in office, Mr. Reagan still thinks be can preserve his big tax cuts and carry on with buge military outlays without dangerously unbalancing the budget. Congress's "down payment" on budget balance ts imperative, but hardly sufficient.

Tax Law: Missing Piece in the Interest Rate Puzzle By Robert J. Samuelson

WASHINGTON — Economic analysis is a stuffy subject, but if you get it wrong, chances of finding the right prescription are almost ril. Consider the ruckus over interest rates. The most common explanations of the high rates are big govern-ment deficits and excessively right credit by the Federal Reserve. Actually, neither fully explains the high rates. The analysis ignores the effect of the tax laws. In brief, they subsidize borrowing and thus make steeper rates necessary to avoid accelerating inflation. Getting the analysis wrong means that the conventional remedies lower deficits or looser monetary policy - are almost certain to fail. In isolation, they either will leave rates high or, by lowering them temporarily, raise inflation and interest rates later. The U.S. political system seems incapable of dealing with more than one economic problem at a time. In 1980 it was inflation; now it is recovery. High interest rates are the Republicans' argument for looser monetary policy, the Fed's argument for lower deficits and the Democrats' argument for retiring Ronald Reagan. Understanding today's rates is difficult. The puzzle is that the same rates have bitten harder abroad than at home. Wall Street economists such as John Paulus of Morgan Stanley believe credit has not been tight; in a recent survey of small businesses. only 7 percent of the respondents judged credit hard to get. And yet the same rates have overwhelmed developing countries whose debts are in ans, who think that American rates keep rates up elsewhere. And, by raising the exchange rate of the dollar. they have made it harder for American export industries to compete. The puzzle can be explained by remembering that interest rates are the prices at which people and companies borrow and lend. Because row for less than the rate of inflation.

U.S. tax laws make interest payments deductible, American and foreign borrowers face different effective interest rates at the same nominal rate. Consider a 10-percent loan. With the top corporate tax rate at 46 percent, a profitable American firm can deduct nearly half the interest expense; this cuts the effective borrowing cost to close to 5 percent. For foreign borrowers without the tax advantage, the effective rate remains 10 percent.

High federal deficits have helped nudge interest rates higher, but they do not account for the major rate rise since the late 1970s. Data show there is little relation in that period between either deficits or total borrowing in the economy and the major changes in the prime rate, even after adjustment for inflation. Interest rates fell as deficits rose.

What actually raised rates was a reversal of the Fed's mistaken policy in the 1970s of trying to hold them down. The tax laws made this a formula for more inflation. In 1978, for example, the average morrgage rate was 9.6 percent; for someone in the 30-percent tax bracket, this meant an effective rate of 6.7 percent, inflation, meanwhile, was running at 7.4 been cushioned by the 1981 Resgan percent: Because people could bor-

AS I WAS GOING

a credit boom ensued. Borrowers gorged on cheap credit. The more the Fed tried to hold rates down, the more it had to expand money and credit. Between 1975 and 1980, the money supply (cash plus checking accounts) rose 41 percent and prices rose 42 percent. As inflation intensified, the Fed grudgingly let interest

The big jump came when the Fed changed strategy. After October 1979, it paid more attention to controlling the money supply. With money restricted, its price (i.e., inter-est rates) soured. Recession resulted, which, by cutting inflation, slowed the demand for money. Today's Fed policy is a confusing mixture of controlling interest rates and money sup-ply. But the same afternax calculus ficates why these rates have not crippled the recovery.

After deductions, a profitable company borrowing at today's prime rate of 12.5 percent has an aftertax rate close to 6.25 percent. With inflation between 4 percent and 5 percent, the real aftertax rate is between 1.25 percent and 2.25 percent.

The effect of higher rates also has investment, and by a mass conversion from long-term to short-term bor-rowing. With fewer investors willing to buy long-term securities, new credit instruments such as adjustable-rate mortgages, which are really a series of short-term loans, have filled the gap.

In 1984 more than 60 percent of mortgage loans had adjustable rates. There is nothing soothing in this analysis. The existing credit system penalizes new firms and taxpayers of modest means, they lack big incomes to absorb deductions. For profitable companies, it subsidizes loans for mergers and other forms of corporate shuffleboard. The decline of longterm lending is economically risky: borrowers are more dependent on floating-rate loans. But any effort to lower interest rates significantly must involve not only smaller deficits but also major changes in the tax laws. The obstacles are huge. The tax deduction for interest is so popular that President Reagan recently retreated from a suggestion to modify it.

But the job is worth tackling, U.S. rates do burden the rest of the world and do hurt export industries. Global growth suffers, and rates become an intensely resented part of U.S. policy. Correctly diagnosing high rates may be politically awkward, but it is the only chance of dealing with them.

How Arthur's Depression Gave Rise to Cohen's Curve

Bob wants $3,000 for President Marcos still exudes the confidence the season, which is really more than of 18 years in office. But three events are Arthur can afford. the greatest threat, is the economy. Inflation is discover the Cohen Curve. If the plumber in turn - The Bangkok Post, uses that money to pay his dentist, the dentist gets to keep only $375. And if the dentist uses that money to FROM OUR MAY 25 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO pay his golf pro, the pro - who makes more money than the dentist By Richard Cohen they're having an affair. This is either the trickle-down theory of economics or something else. I think it is something else. In fact, I have drawn a curve for it — the Coben Curve - and intend to make a fortune on a book, a newsletter and on the lecture circuit. Then I can afford a summer bouse, too.

I will call this concept the Division Theory of Economics. But no matter what I call it, I will not be able to explain how the government managed to tax Arthur's $6,000 five times before it almost evaporated into thin air. The way I figure it, the government got $3,000 from Arthur, $1,500 from Bob, $750 from the plumber, $375 from the dentist and $187.50 from

but not as much as the plumber—gets to keep $187.50, which he'll spend on the dentist's wife because that the government got $5.812.50 in taxes out of the initial $6,000.
That's not a 50-percent tax. That's That's not a 50-percent tax. That's a 96.8-percent tax.

What is starting about this is that it directly contradicts the so-called multiplier effect which we learned about in school. In that now-disproven theory, as a dollar passes through the economy it is multiplied several times. Each person uses that dollar to generate even more money and in this way the economy blooms and booms.

But it is clear now that as the dollar passes through the economy, 50 percent of it gets taken by the govern-ment each stop along the way and in the end there is nothing left. This is the cause of depressions. It is certainly the cause of Arthur's Depression. It is also a refutation of Kemp-Roth economics which, I think, is named after a chain of movie thethe golf pro. What the golf pro got is none of my business. All I know is lead to greater investment and thus, in the long run, added income for the government. It is clear, though, that if my friend earned $6,000, paid half in taxes and saved the rest, the government would lose four bites at the money, for a net loss to the Treasury of $2,812.50. As President Reagan now knows, if you took the dollars lost to the government in savings and put them end to end they would reach from Washington to the moon.

Not only that, but the plumber would not plumb, the dentist would not deat and the golf pro would not golf. Take into account their suppliers, and the total cost to the Treasury of Arthur not renting the summer house is $1.32 billion. As an American, does Arthur have a choice? I realize, of course, that others would argue differently. They are wrong. Many of these are people wedded to "trickle-down economics," named after the way John Maynard Keynes are soup. They do not understand how much is at stake in the mere-renting of a summer house.

The government ought to bail out Arthur the way it did Chrysler and give him the money for his summer rental. That way, the tax chain linking him to the plumber, the dentist and the golf pro will not be broken and the economy will be saved.

Anyway, Arthur is still waiting to hear whether his offer will be accepted. If it is, he's out $3,000. If it is not the government is out $5,812.50 and of course the dentist's wife will be crushed. I suggest she incorporate.

On Nonproliferation In response to "What the Treaty

Says" (Letters, May 16): I suggest that Arend Meerburg read the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons. It is a model of clarity.

According to Article III, Section 1, "Each non-nuclear-weapon state party to the treaty undertakes to accept saleguards... The saleguards re-quired by this article shall be applied on all source or special fissionable material in all peaceful suclear activiues within the territory of such state, under its jurisdiction, or carried out under its control anywhere."

Article IL Section 2, then declares that "each state party to the treaty undertakes not to provide: (a) source or special fissionable material, or (b) equipment or material especially designed for the processing, use or pro-duction of special fissionable material shall be subject to the safeguards required by this article." The "sale-guards required by this article" are defined in its first subsection; and they are full-scope safeguards, on "all peaceful nuclear activities." No sophistry by eager and unscrupulous nuclear exporters can disguise the simple and ugly truth: Nuclear commerce with non-nuclear-weapons states that do not accept full-scope safeguards contravenes the clear-cut commitment embodied in the treaty.

To be sure, as Mr. Meerburg as serts, there appears to be a "general understanding" to the contrary among those more concerned to promore nuclear power than to control its misuse. But they cannot cite the nonproliferation treaty in their defense, Paul Leventhal — in "The Chi-uese Nuclear Deal Should Set an Example" (May 10) - was right.

Setting Back The Clock

the Russians allowed Andrei Sakharov and his wife to emigrate, one could be reasonably sure that they would be welcomed as honored guests at the White House - unlike Alexander Solzhenitsyn, whom, on Henry Kissinger's advice, President Ford refused to entertain.

No one doubts the Reagan administration's tenacity in standing up against the tide of arrests and trials of human rights activists in the Soviet Union. Mr. Reagan's position on the Soviet Union, however, throws into relief how equivocal he has been in the rest of the world.

Third World tyranny has been given an easy passage. There have been some exceptions: the quiet diploma-cy that led to the freeing by South Korea of the opposition leader, Kim Dae June, the public endorsement of the South African court decision that vindicated the rights of thousands of black families to live in urban areas, and the decision not to certify to Congress that Chile had made pro-gress on human rights, which placed pressure on the government of Augusto Pinochet to allow some exiles to return.

But that is about it. The Reagan administration has wound back the clock, ignoring, redefining, vetoing and defying U.S. laws governing human rights policy.

Section 666 of the Foreign Assistance Act prohibits the provision of security assistance to police and domestic intelligence agencies abroad. On June 1, 1983, the Reagan administration concluded negotiations with the Philippines to renew the agree-ment that allows U.S. use of military bases there. But a quid pro quo was aid to the Philippine national police. Section 701 of the International inancial Institutions Act requires the American representatives to six multilateral development banks not to support aid to countries that en-gage in "a constant pattern of gross violation of human rights." The Rea-gan administration has reversed previous U.S. policy by supporting loans to South Korea, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, the Philippines, El Salvador, Guatemals and Argentina. At the United Nations the Reagan ministration has seen itself almost totally isolated in its refusal to vote for resolutions criticizing human rights violations in Guatemala and El Salvador, In opposing a resolution on El Salvador, leane Kirkpatrick, the U.S. representative, argued that the resolution failed to take into account that "most of the climate of fear and acts of economic sabotage are com-misted by guerrillas fighting against the government." But, according to the Office of Legal Oversight of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of San Salvador, the number of civilian noncombatants murdered by security forces in 1983 was 5.142. The number murdered by guerrillas was 63. rights treaties on the books, signed but not ratified by the United States -conventions on the prevention and punishment of genocide, on the elim-mation of racial discrimination, on hance of racial discrimination, on hann rights, on civil and political rights and economic, social and cul-tural rights. The Reagan administra-tion has failed to take a public position on any of these, and Mr. Reagan is the first U.S. president in 23 years who has not tried to persuade Congress to ratify the genocide treaty.

The Reagan administration, to be fair, has a rationale for what it is doing. Mrs. Kirkpatrick elaborated it in her celebrated, November 1979
"Commentary" article, in which she argued the distinction between "traditional authoritarian" regimes and "totalitarian" regimes. There is much truth in this: Undoubtedly there has been more flexibility under Latin American dictatorships than under East European Communism.

No military regime in Latin America has lasted a generation, and even in the darkest days of opposition. church and human rights groups and critical newspaper reporting have survived, to varying degrees. Never-theless, where Mrs. Kirkpatrick went badly wrong was in ignoring the se-verity of torture, kidnapping and marder in Latin America. This attitude has been underlined by the formal decision of the Reagan administration to shift the emphasis of human rights policy to "political rights," playing down buman abuse, supporting countries where even a tenuous case can be made that there is movement toward democracy. This has been successful to the degree that it has reassured the public and taken the sting out of congressional oversight. If the administration is fighting for democracy, as in El Salvador, then concern about death squads and torture must take a back seat. Once democracy arrives and communist influence is removed, the rest should follow.

The virtue of the Reagan policy is that it is cohesive. Jimmy Carter, who talked ceaselessly about human rights and encouraged much of the legislation that Mr. Reagan is pushing aside, seemed to have no sense of priorities, no clear rationale for the exceptions he made. By the end, Mr. Carter was throwing his weight behind the Salvadoran junta and initiating the military commitment that Mr. Reagan has built on.

Yet this criticism misses an impor-tant point. The world, however much it may puff and protest, does admire the United States when it stands up for human rights. What Mr. Carter did was to set a tone that countries found themselves, willy-nilly, being compelled to imitate. Countries as diverse as Brazil, Nigeria, Peru and Upper Volta were influenced by it.
The Reagan administration has done the cause of freedom a disservice. Sadly, there is no political leader in sight who seems to have a better alternative.

Front and Center, the Hotel Concierge

ARIS — Of all the personnel in grand hotels, the most intimidating is usually the hall porter or concierge — multilingual, omniscient, trimly uniformed with his lapel insignia of crossed gold keys, always too busy and often too brusque. By tradition the concierge is a know-all. The current view in the hotel trade is that he should also be a father figure.

"When the guest arrives he is greeted by the doorman and given his room. When he gets into his room he feels like an orphan," says Jean Gillet, his cheery round face saddening at the solitude of the long-distance traveler. What the orphaned guest should do, Gillet says, is go right down and introduce himself to the concierge and tell him how long he is staying and that he counts on the concierge to make him feel at home. The concierge is there, although not all of them seem to know it, to make the guest's stay a pleasant one.

"The concierge is the private secretary of each guest," Gillet says. The concierge is also looked on these days as the hotel's chief instrument of fidelisation, French trade jargon for ensuring repeat stays.

Jean Gillet sees the concierge's role as a noble one because he was one himself, as was his father. Now general manager of the Hôtel Meurice in Paris, where he held the golden keys to the concierge's loge from 1955 to 1972, Gillet is, with Paul Bougeneaux, formerly of the Plaza Athènée, a rare example of the concierge's rising to top executive level. Gillet misses being a concierge a lot. "It was so much more fun," he says with a sigh. "Sometimes I just sneak ont of my office and act the concierce."

Raised in the old grand hotel tradition, Gillet is now expert in modern techniques although he claims, for example, that he will oot take groups in his hotel. "I don't take groups, but I never refuse people who travel together, even if there are 50 of them." And he is the leader behind a new concept in concierge training. Instead of years of apprenticeship, the concierge of the future will attend a special school for 32 weeks to learn the essentials of

The foundation sponsors seminars for concierges — one, on the concierge and the computer, is being held right now in Barcelona, another will take place in New York in June. The school is the most important step so far. "It is," says Jean Gillet, a man not given to boasting, "a unique event in the history of the hotel trade,"

The first class will be limited to men and women between the ages of 17 and 25 from European Community countries who have passed entrance examinations and who speak English and, if possible, a second foreign tongue. In addition to field trips and on-the-spot training they will learn about a variety of subjects from the concierge's viewpoint. In math, they will study exchange rates, in geography the tourist attractions of major cities. In the field of foreign affairs, they will learn about the policies of leading international hotel chains and in law about responsibilities if a suitcase is lost or a message undelivered. Tustico costs 16,000 francs (about $1,900), most of which can be covered by a student loan at extremely generous terms.

When Jean Gillet's father trained a youth to become a concierge, the apprenticeship lasted from the age of 12 to 20. The school aims in one academic year to teach just the basics of being a concierge, not the technique for becoming a great head concierge.

"People go to cooking school to learn to cook, oot to become Bocuse or Troisgros. Some of them may of course become Bocuse or Troisgros," Gillet says.

The school also has an American branch in Pomona, New Jersey, which plans to open its doors this summer and which hopes to have 300 students by its second year, other branches are planned in Mexico, West Germany and Britain. Tuition for 900 hours of instruction is $5,190, including books and uniform, and courses include "Travel Psychology and Sales," "Microcomputer Operations" and "Marketing of Hospitality Services." According to Louis Cress, head of the American branch, there will be less emphasis on foreign languages than in Paris. "Foreign languages are a necessity in New York, less in Des Moines," he says, "They won't be obliged to he multilingual but we will point out that a lack of languages can limit their incomes." Starting salary for a concierge in the United States, he says, is about $15,000, which can be doubled by tips. A head concierge earns more.

There are 3,000 concierges in the world, only 60 of them in the United States, Cress says. Surveys indicate that by 1990 the United States alone will need 5,000 concierges — by concierge, Cress is, of course, talking of the hotel professional, not the person called a concierge in fancy new New York buildings who is really a superintendent in a necktie.

As the richer countries move from an industrial to a service-oriented society, the concierge is likely to become more and more important. In Europe he has not only the usual duties but increasingly he acts — in the franglais that has invaded the hotel business — as le welcome desk and le public relations of the hotel. He is also into sales: "He sells the hotel's services to the guest, he sells him his city, he sells his country to the world," Jean Gillet says.

Gillet's father, Ferdinand, left the Valais region of Switzedand to seek his fortune in London before World War L After the war, he became a night concierge at the now-defunct Hôtel du Rhin on the Rue Castiglione, near the Meurice. In 1925 the Hôtel Scribe opened near the Opera with the intention of rivaling the Ritz, and within six months Ferdinand Gillet was its head concierge, a job he held until he retired at the age of 71 in 1966. "He thought it was the most wonderful job in the world," his son says. Young Jean always entered the hotel by the luggage entrance and was never allowed in the lobby. "Of course that made me decide that when I was hig that was where I wanted to

In those days, there were many famous concierges — Cacciolato at the Plaza Athènee, Mourelot at the Ritz, Jimmy Stewart at the Dorchester in London, Goodde at the Four Seasons in Munich, Oscar Wirth in Zurich. They were men of influence and discretion.

"A concierge cannot write his memoirs," Jean Gillet says. "One of them tried — he was then head concierge at the George V. My father went to see him and said, 'I think, cher ami, that you will never write this book." He didn't."

When Jean Gillet became head concierge at the Meurice in 1955, he was 33 and the youngest man ever to hold the joh. "My father was terrified," Gillet says. The Meurice, now part of the loter-Continental chain, a subsidiary of Grand Metropolitan Ltd., began as a coaching chain with branches in Calais and London. Trying to cash in on the travel boom after the Napoleonic wars, says Jean Gillet, "M. Meurice began doing le marketing in 1836 by claiming to have the only botel that could receive the British in the manner to which they were accustomed." This meant bacon and eggs and hotwater hottles, Gillet explains.

Today the hotel industry is a strange combination of high-technology marketing techniques and old-fashioned service. The link between the two worlds is the concierge, and the link was made into a chain as long ago as 1938, when Ferdinand Gillet founded Les Clefs d'Or, a professional organization of English and French concierges that met annually midway between London and Paris at Le Touquet. After World War II he expanded Les Clefs d'Or to include 7 European countries. There says.

In addition to meeting their concierge, Gillet wishes that guests would complain more. "If a guest doesn't like something and doesn't complain, we know we'll oever see him again," he

The genial Gillet has a special penchant for difficult customers. "Unless people are being really nasty, I can understand how they feel when things go wrong. And there are accidents in this business because it's a human ooe. The difficult guests are the most interesting — to get thanks from an ordinary guest is pleasant, but to get them from someone who is difficult is a triumph. A really difficult customer is extremely faithful if you please him, and if you please him word gets round and everyone says, "Gillet is great!"

Art Catches the Multinationals' Eye

by Axel Krause

ARIS — To help promote their image with customers, governments, employees and the public, major multinational corporations are increasingly and happily becoming patrons of the arts. From a modest start in the United States in the early 1960s, with David Rockefeller and the Chase Manhattan Bank in the forefront, the movement is booming there and has now gone global — spreading first to Western Europe and gradually to Asia and the Middle East.

The multinationals feel this makes good business sense. As an official of a large U.S.-based company said about the opening of an art exhibition his company sponsored in Paris, "People we invite, such as corporate customers, bring their wives, view the show, meet people and get a well-done catalog—they wind up knowing who was responsible and maybe what we manufacture." In his company's case, the products include military helicopters, a far cry from art.

As patrons, the multinationals receive strong encouragement from financially strained museums and cultural centers and from some governments that, because of heavy budgetary pressures, are willing to overlook political or ideological opposition. France is a notable example. "What you call sponsoring is a European tradition which we are rediscovering now—and most definitely welcoming," says Jack—lang, France's minister of culture.

Such encouragement comes two years after Lang stirred a conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Mexico by calling for "a real crusade against ... financial and intellectual imperialism." His comment was widely interpreted as a deliberate attack against growing U.S. dominance of the arts internationally, an impression Lang has since tried to correct. Among the steps he has taken is to attend the opening of "Masterpieces of American Painting: 1760-1910," an exhibition that United Technologies Corp. is sponsoring at the Grand Palais here, and to warmly introduce and thank Hubert Faure, the company's senior executive vice president.

Although dozens of companies and banks throughout Europe have long been involved with the arts in their home countries, only some have gone international. Such worldwide support for art museums, theaters, operas, orchestras, television programs, cultural festivals and artistic centers is being given by the following companies: United Technologies, International Business Machines, Olivetti of Italy, Exxon, Philip Morris, Mobil, American Express, Johnson Wax, Warner Communications and Turmac, the Dutch tobacco group, Many operate through foundations, reporting to the parent company's "vice president for culture."

Most of their spending is still done in the United States, where it totals about $1.5 billion annually. The amount of money spent outside the United States is relatively modest, about $100 million annually.

"This kind of corporate support is still somewhat marginal for us over here," Lang explains in an interview, "but the multinationals are helping set the example." He notes that three sponsored exhibitions in Paris are drawing large crowds — "Masterpieces of American Painting" and "The Treasure of St. Mark's," (United and Olivetti, respectively, both at the Grand Palais) and the Bonnard show at the Pompidou Center (IBM).

"Our hope is that it will encourage French companies to do the same," Lang says, adding that companies such as Elf Aquitaine, Crédit Agricole, Crédit Lyonnais and Renault have already started. As government ministers are doing in some other countries, Lang is pressing the Finance Ministry to expand tax advantages for companies and banks that sponsor the arts. Mainly these credits take the form of deductions from total sales or profits, a widespread practice in the United States, where the deductible limit was recently raised to 10 percent of pretax profits.

In European countries, the lack of financial incentives — or of awareness that they exist—is a definite handicap for culture officials, planners and curators. "The fact that corporations do not realize there are financial incentives is definitely a technical obstacle," says Henry Pillsbury, executive director of the American Center in Paris. "But it goes further, since this also hinders their realizing that there are other advantages to getting involved in the arts."

Indeed, many companies do not feel that art sponsorship fits into corporate strategy. "Most British companies, including the largest, still view support of the arts as charity," says Colin Tweedy, director of the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts. Grouping 130 companies and banks based in Britain—including Midland, Barclays and National Westminster banks, Marks & Spencer, Sainsbury, Shell Oil and British Petroleum—the association spent about £14 millioo ($19.3 million) last year to support cultural activities. Grazie, Muti — Naples Marks A Homecoming

by David Stevens

APLES—No matter what else happens during the rest of the Philadelphia Orchestra's tour of Europe, there is unlikely to be anything to compare with the emotion-packed pair of concerts here this week. It was the Philadelphians' first visit to this city, and for Riccardo Muti, the orchestra's music director, it was both a musical homecoming and a family reunion.

Despite Muti's status as a local boy and the fame of the orchestra he has oow headed for four seasons, he looked forward to this stop oo the tour with a certain apprehension. "This is an emotional public, but it is not an easy public," he said when the music-making was over. "After all, Caruso was boood when he first appeared here and he oever came back, and he was Neapolitan."

Nonetheless, the public that packed the historic Teatro San Carlo gave Most a triumph in its own fashion, reserved at first and then with mounting enthusiasm, peppered with individual comments fired with impeccable iming into moments of silence — the same kind of timing it takes to cross a busy street on foot here, even with the help of a green light.

"Welcome," barked one stentorian member of the andience as Muti first appeared on stage Monday. After he led the orchestra through Franck's D-minor Symphooy and a virtuoso performance of Mahler's First Symphony, the general applause was sprinkled with cries of "Muti" and "grazie," until one ringing voice from the back of the audience made the message clear: "Thank you for coming back to us."

Muti gravely thanked the public in his name and that of the orchestra, then galloped his troops through an encore, the Spanish Dance from Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake."

The next evening was more of the same as Muti led the orchestra through a musically demanding program — Bartok, Hindemith and Schubert's Ninth Symphony — that showed off the Philadelphians' strength in every department. And when it became clear that Muti and the orchestra were going to deliver an encore, there were again calls of "grazie" — one man even thanked the theater's director, presumably for hringing Muti back in the first place — until finally the conductor turned with a little smile and said "Prego," which conveyed both a polite "You're welcome," and a "Can we begin

And when the audience recognized the opening ootes of the overture to Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" — the only Italian and the only operatic work of the two evenings — a gasp of pleasure and anticipation swept through the theater. The ovation that followed it did oot end even when Muti took the musicians offstage with him; he had to return alone hefore the public was finally satisfied.

he 43-year-old Must was born in southern Italy and hrought up in Naples, where as a teenager he studied at the San Pietro a Maiella Conservatory before going to Milan to continue his musical studies. He has not often come back here as a performer, so this was a special occasion, attended on both evenings hy a large family contingeot headed by his father, still a practicing doctor here in his late 70s.

"I sort of disappeared during the '70s when I was in London with the Philharmonia Orchestra," Muti recalled. "Then in 1980, after the earthquake, they called and asked me to please come help, with any orchestra I wanted. I said I wanted to conduct the San Carlo Orchestra, and I think this was much appreciated, and when I came on to the stage someone in the audience shouted, 'We had to wait for an earthquake to get you back here.' I felt a little bit guilty."

So he made a point of starting the Italian part of this tour in Naples, and in 1985 he will conduct opera here for the first time, opening the San Carlo's operatic season with a new production of Verdi's "Macbeth."

"There has been so much tragedy and so many problems here, I thought that it was my duty now that they are trying to improve the situation at the theater."

But his principal artistic home remains Philadelphia, where he has four seasons to go on his present contract and where he feels deeply committed to both orchestra and community — a relationship that he says will not be affected by his future musical directorship of Milan's La Scala. It was clear here that there still is a honeymoon relationship between Moti and this orchestra that has known only two other music directors in the last seven decades — Leopold Stakowski and Fugene Normandy.

Stokowski and Eugene Normandy.

"He has been music director only since 1980," said Norman Carol, the orchestra's concertmaster since 1966, "bot he has been with us milan, Monday; Vero regularly since 1972. We saw something special in him right away. He 1, and Paris, June 2.

began as a fantastic talent and he has grown with the orchestra. He has refined the sound that was there and, for instance, made us a much better Mozart orchestra than in the past." For Carol, Muti is "touched by God," an artist with musical understanding beyond his oseph de Pasquale, for 20 years the orchestra's principal violist, a veteran of the Koussevitzky. Munch and Leinsdorf eras in the same post with the Boston Symphony and one of three hrothers in the Philadelphia Orchestra, agrees in more down-to-earth terms. "He has given us a wonderful vitality, injected us with fresh hlood," de Pasquale says. "He is not only a great conductor — and I have seen many conductors — he is talented beyond words, musically, in temperament and technique. He is the best thing that ever happened to us. We have been criticized for oot picking an American to succeed Ormandy, but we picked the best — in the eyes of the orchestra, the directors and the public."

Like many of the musicians, de Pasquale pool-pools the notion of a "Philadelphia sound." The orchestra can produce any sound a conductor wants, he says. Whatever Mun wants, Muti gets.

conductor wants, he says. Whatever Mun wants, Muti gets.

De Pasquale is also enthusiastic about shifts in the orchestra's repertory, especially toward opera—concert performances of "Macheth" were the major event in the Philadelphians' recent season. "It's a new repertory for us, and a revelation for me at my age."

a new repertory for us, and a revelation for me at my age."

As for the Naples concerts, he adds, "We have heen looking forward to doing our best here, in Muti's hometown, and as for the public reaction I can remember only one thing like it — when the Boston Symphony first went to Russia." De Pasquale himself, along with such other orchestra members of Italian origin as Anthony Gigliotti, principal clarinetist for 35 years, has been the object of concentrated attention in the Negrotian press.

concentrated attention in the Neapolitan press.

In Philadelphia, Muti says, "I am trying to enlarge the repertoire in the direction of more classical and baroque and contemporary music, to go with the romantic works, and I am trying to attract a different kind of public. We have opened our dress rehearsals to studeots, and not just music students."

The orchestra's range this past season encompassed not only the spectacular "Macbeth" performances, but also a final series of concerts that concentrated on Vivaldi, using almost all the orchestra members in rotation. And he is pleased too that since he took over as music director, the list of subscribers has grown from 19,000 to 33,000

Muti, who likes to spend as much time as he can with his wife and three children at home in Ravenna, Italy, sees his appointment as music director of La Scala as simplifying his life.

"I will be four months a year in Philadelphia, and instead of running around the world conducting opera, it will all be at La Scala," he says. "Also, at La Scala, I am mainly responsible for the quality of the orchestra, but there are also an artistic director and general manager for the theater."

The orchestra's tour continues in Florence, Friday; Turin, Sunday; Milan, Monday; Verona, Tuesday; London, Wednesday; Berlin, June 1, and Paris, June 2.

Next to the fading hotel bill, under a magnifying glass, is his book, "Home Letters," opened to a page where one can read, "Another letter from this beautiful hotel whose face you must be getting to know by heart."

A living landmark of Syria's Turkish, French and British colonial history, the Baron Hotel today is living mostly on memories. After half a century, the same Mazloumian family still runs the now-shabby hotel, although bad debts and mismanagement have forced its takeover by the Commercial Bank of Syria.

As Krikor Mazionmian, the 75-year-old son of one of the two founders, tells the story, however, it was all the fault of governmen fixed prices held so low that it was impossible to make ends meet. Better known to the locals as "Coco Baron," Mazloumian reigns over the hotel, providing it with color, spirit and tales of the past to make up for the barely edible food and distinctly seedy interior.

"We have no pretensions," Mazloumian keeps telling guests by way of apology, be-tween glassfuls of Armenian brandy that he coaxes from his half-English daughter, Mary, who keeps the bottle under lock and key.

From the moment a guest enters the door of the four-story limestone building on Baron Street in downtown Aleppo, it is clear that a different experience in hotels is shead: Two overweight golden retrievers with the unlikely names of Caesar and Portialle sprawi at the foot of the rickety main staircase, barking litfully at the guests and each other.

provided the excuse, if one were needed, for the launching of a reconstruction program.

In late January, everyone was ready to unveil his plans. The city arranged to display Man's version of how the square should look in several ground-floor rooms of the Palazzo Reale; the countermovement set up shop in a hall in the Galleria San Fedele near La

Mari unveiled plans, drawings and stylized models in shiny gold metal that some observers felt resembled a cross between "Star Wars" and Stonehenge. He offered three projects that ranged from the modest to the elaborate. Some of the 48 designers of the countermovement were nearly as elaborate.

Both exhibitions attracted large crowds. A few older Milanese were annoyed by the deliberately provocative proposals of young designers and a few younger visitors were noisily surcastic about the academicism of some of the older architects. Generally the visitors were polite and studious, with a surprisingly large number filling out the forms provided for the public's reactions.

Most visitors appeared more amused than outraged by the counter-exhibit's most radical proposal. According to the architect, the Duomo should be removed from the pizzza, which could then be converted into a vast communal vegetable garden. As for the pumacled pile of the cathedral, a retouched photograph showed plopped down in a large, flat, lonely field of sugarbeers somewhere in the Po Valley far from Milan.

Everyone appeared to have a good time and the general conclusion seemed to be that it was a diverting and harmless exercise. Lack of funds and agreement will ensure that little, if anything, will be done to "complete" the Piazza del Duomo.

either for the hotel or the family. He says the ministry plans to buy the hotel from the Commercial Bank, fix it up but leave "Coco Baron" at war with Israel. Another truth is that Syria could easily become one of the Arab world's main tourist attractions.

Its untapped tourist wealth includes the remarkable stone-vaulted market and huge citadel in Aleppo, the sprawling, partly restored Roman city in the desert oasis town of Palmyra, the well-preserved Crusader fortress, the Krac des Chevaliers, in the countryside near Tartus, the breathtaking Omayyad mosque in Damascus and some 3,000 archaeological sites. In addition, some of the Middle East's finest handicrafts, silks and rugs are to be found in

After years of neglect and indifference to the country's tourist potential, the government is acting. "It's been a little bit late, but Syria is now ready to receive tourists," says Dage, the tourism minister. "We have made a lot of investment. We're ready. We have the minimum necessary."

Whether the political climate, now soured by an incipient struggle for succession to the ail-ing president, Hafez al-Assad, will allow the ministry to reach its good ministry to reach its goal remains to be seen.
But Syria does seem to have "the minimum necessary" in terms of botels, transportation and services to begin receiving tourists on a much larger scale. To begin with, there is a string of state-owned, five-star hotels being run by the French chain, Meridien, in Latakia, Aleppo, Palmyra and Damascus, most of which are half-empty. One of the most spectacular new offerings by the Ministry of Tourism is a three-week spring music festival in Palmyra, a three-hour car ride from Damascus thanks to a new descri road. Concerts by local and European artists are held Thursdays and Saturdays inside the restored and floodlit Temple of Bal at the center of the Roman rums. Daqr says new regulations will make it easier for tourists, particularly those traveling in groups, to get visas — even at the airport. Another problem lies in the potentially conflicting types of rourists. Danuscus is flooded these days with thousands of Iranians visiting holy sites. Pious and intolerant, they have on several occasions created incidents by trying to close hotel bars and nightclubs and attempting to put up signs in favor of Ayatolish Ruhollah Khomemi's Islamic revolution. The Ministry of Tourism has virtually segregated these tourists in special hotels where bars, nightchibs and risque video films are forbidden and has arranged escorted package tours to keep them from causing trouble for

Probably the most important obstacle to attracting tourists, however, is the generally suspicious and obstructionist attitude of every one from customs and airport officials to the ubiquitous plainclothes policemen in the streets toward foreigners. Westerners in partic-

A Guide to Tipping Tactics Around the World

The following guide offers suggestions on appropriate levels of tipping in the countries listed. In some cases, when neighboring countries have similar tipping practices they have been grouped under one heading. In many places, inflation will very soon outdone exact figures. This is the third and final part of a series; the first article appeared May 11 and the second May 18.

CHINA

One of the pleasures of traveling in China is that tipping is forbidden. The Communist authorities consider tipping a despicable bourgeois habit that demeans the worker. In hotels. and restaurants, the service is part of the price. A waiter or taxi driver does not expect any tip. and trying to give him one may be taken as an

But the prohibition against tipping is awk-ward for a tourist who wants to thank an especially helpful tour guide or room clerk. Far safer than money are modest souvenirs, such as lapel pms, postcards, ball-point pens or ciga-rettes. Most Chinese welcome something that will help improve their English; guides often appreciate paperback books. Don't offer any-thing that might be construed as anti-Communist or pornographic. And, if the recipient demurs, don't press your gift.

The porter at the sirport would consider 3 Hong Kong dollars (about 40 cents) a bag to be a moderate tip, 5 dollars generous. Major hotels include a 10-percent service charge and tipping is purely discretionary. To ensure that the full amount goes to the service personnel, it is best to tip in cash rather than with a credit card. As a rough guide; doorman and bellman 2 to 10 dollars, room porter for service beyond the rontine, 5 to 20 dollars.

Taxi For the ride from the sirport, 5 dollars; for a short ride in town, up to 3 dollars.

Major restaurants include a 10-percent service charge. If the service is good, an additional 5 percent might be added as a tip. When eating or drinking informally, say in a coffee shop, the local custom is merely to leave the loose change as a tip. However, traditional Chinese restantation of the contract of th rants do not include a service charge in the bill, so tipping is necessary. When in doubt, ask the waiter if the service charge is included. Personal Services

JAPAN

Japan's basic rule on upping is easy to remember: Don't bother

In just about every normal travel situation, gramines are either unnecessary or actually frowned on, the Japanese taking a dim view of open exchanges of cash. The bellman, the hotel maid, the cab driver — none expects a tip, and some, although hardly all, will shake off tourists trying to press a bill into their hands. Hotels and most restaurants add a 10-percent service charge and 10 percent for tax, except perhaps in the smallest dinera The rule does have exceptions. In irons, give 2,000 to 3,000 yen ($8.75 to $13) to the woman who takes care of your room and serves dinner and breakfast. This money should be given at end, and it should be put into an envelope. Porters and tour leaders are paid a fixed fee. The okami-sun - hostess - in geisha houses should be paid extra; the money is intended for later distribution among the geishs. Expect to pay a lot; there is no way to visit a geisha house on the cheap.

A little extra to the cab driver for special service or courtesy would out hurt, although the chances of spending much money this way in Tokyo taxis are slim.

EAST ASIA

South Korea, a way station for many executives, plays by the same basic rule as Japan: no tipping. However, prices and wages are much lower in Seoul and other cities, so taking a rigid stand against a little income redistribution seems an act of high stinginess.

Tipping is relaxed in other Southeast Asian countries, where a service charge is added to the bill. But in Singapore, tipping is prohibited by law and one result is that service can be extraordinarily grudging. In Thailand, an additional 10 percent in restaurants is generous. Most botels now inchide a service charge. Many of the country's service workers are nonetheless quite poor and could use a tip of any size. Substantial tips are expected for any remarkable service, such as a long hot drive or special meal. Thailand is very rank-conscious and people who look important don't get tipped —although everyone, loves a gift. Whisky is usually suitable, and cognac is a national passion.

In the South Pacific islands, tipping is frowned upon but not legally banned in New Caledonia and Tahiti, and is discouraged elsewhere as being out of keeping with local traditions of hospitality.

PHILIPPINES

Certain loose standards have been established by custom; the theory that the 10-percent service charge covers everything is taken seriously and anything on top of that is accepted with a smiling thank-you. In no case, one is assured, would the average Filipino show re-sentment over a gratuity considered inade-quate. Nevertheless, there are some guidelines for the uncertain visitor.

Arrival/Hotel

The porter at the airport, the hotel doorman, who assists with luggage and the bellman who takes it to your room should each be paid a peso (about 7 cents) a bag. A peso or two will suffice for any of the usual hotel services, such as taking laundry or delivering a room-service order. The chambermaid or room porter may be rewarded at the end of a stay at a rate of 2 pesos a day. If the concierge and his staff have been especially helpful, 50 or 100 pesos can be left to be-divided.

It is usual to let the thiver keep the change for a short trip; tip 10 percent for a longer one. Restaurants

You will never go wrong tipping 10 percent. in a top-class restaurant an appropriate tip might be 15 percent, but in the average place you can just leave the change, even if it is less than 10 percent. Captains, wine stewards and the mattre d'hôtel need not be tipped. In a really fine restaurant, 5 or 10 pesos for the wine steward, 10 or 20 pesos for the captain and up to 50 pesos for the mattre d'hôtel would be suitable, but not obligatory.

Personal Services

Some people give the barber or hairdresser a 5-peso note no matter what the charge, which may range from 50 pesos in a hotel shop to 15 pesos outside, or tell him or her to keep the change if it comes near that sum. A tour guide may be handed 5 pesos if the service has been routine, 10 if special.

INDIA

Although tipping is not always expected, it is commonly practiced. The tips given are often low by Western standards.

Arrival/Hotel

The enthusiastic fellow who picks up your luggage would appreciate 2 rupees (20 cents) a bag in addition to the fee of I ripee a bag charged by the Airport Workers Society. A tip to the hotel doorman should be a minimum of 5 rupees at a moderately priced botel; 10 rupees would be generous. At a luxury hotel 10 rupees is a moderate tip and 15 to 20 is a good one. A beliman at a moderate hotel would be satisfied with 2 rupees a bag, even happier with 5. At a luxury hotel, the rates would be about double Chambermaids are known as housekeepers in India; in five-star hotels they are assisted by sweepers and belimen. Modest tips for them would be about 10 rupees and generous ones would be anything upward of 25 for the entire stay. Most large Indian hotels have a laundry service with a tailor, who for a modest tip of about 10 rupees (he does not usually charge a fee) would fix loose coat buttons and mend a

In a smaller place, few women do the cleaning chores; the room waiters and sweepers and belimen do the work. Five rupees would be an adequate tip for belimen and others and more than 10 would be quite generous. In most luxury botels; anything from 2 to 5 rapees is acceptable for the person who shines your shoes while 10 rupees is generous. Halve those rates for moderate hotels. For the concierge, about 10 rupees is average while 20 rupees and upward is generous at a fuxury hotel. At a moderately priced hotel, 5 rupees is the bottom line while 10 rupees is good.

Taxi

There are usually no tips for drivers who have metered taxis, nor do the drivers expect any. Drivers of unmetered, privately operated taxis, usually hired for the day, expect a tip of about 20 rupees.

Restaurants

A waiter at a moderately priced restaurant should receive 5 percent of the check as a moderate up; 10 to 15 percent is generous. Ten percent is about average for a luxury restaurant while 15 to 20 percent would be considered generous. Liquor is served mainly at highpriced hotels and wine stewards can be tipped about the same as waiters at such establishments. It is not customary to tip a restaurant captain or a maître d'hôtel.

Personal Services

Ten rupees is considered a good tip for a haircut, facial or other beauty treatment.

Ten rupees is also about right for a guide in a tour bus, but a private guide should be tipped at least 25 rupees.

MEXICO

A 100-peso (about 60-cent) tip may increase the daily salary of a Mexican service worker by one seventh or more and will be greeted happily in most circumstances. The exception is resort areas and hotels catering largely to foreign tourists, where service personnel are more conscious of the dollar exchange rate; tips there tend to be a bit higher.

Arrival/Hotel At the airport, 100 pesos is an appropriate tip for a porter whom you ask to help you with your bags, while 50 pesos is fair for the people who gather around the taxi stand and snatch your bags to transport them the three feet from the stand to the car, Doormen are sometimes tipped for hailing a taxi for you, more often not; 50 pesos is considered generous. The doorman who handles your luggage often simply unloads it on a cart and vanishes before Robert Trumbull you have a chance to tip. If be carries it to the reception desk, 50 to 100 pesos is appropriate.

Bellhops should be tipped a minimum of 100 pesos, 150 in better places and tourist areas. This should be increased if you have a lot of huggage; 75 pesos a bag is a fair guideline. Mexicans tend not to tip chambermaids, but foreigners do, at least oo stays longer than a night; 500 pesos for a weeklong stay is fair. For impsual service, an extra 100 to 200 pesos is appropriate. Coocierges are almost never tipped unless they provide an exceptional service, such as getting reservations at a restaurant you've just been told is full, in which case you might give 100 to 200 pesos.

Taxi drivers are almost oever tipped on short runs and infrequently on long runs, such as the one from the sirport to downtown, although 50 to 100 pesos is appreciated if the driver helps you with your bags or provides some special service. The tourist taxis you are likely to hail outside botels in Mexico City charge outrageous prices by Mexican standards and are not usually tipped.

Restaurants

The rule of thumb is 15 percent of the cost of the meal. Figuring this is made easy by the 15-percent Mexican sales tax, marked IVA, on your bill. (Do not mistake it for a tip.) Captains seldom receive ops except at the very most elegant places, where 5 percent is appropriate. Personal Services

Hair stylists are generally tipped 10 to 15 percent of their fee. Shoe shiners are sometimes tipped, sometimes not, 20 in 30 pesos above the cost of the shine is generous.

Private tour guides should be tipped 150 to 300 pesos above the cost of their services; tipping in group tours is less common unless the tour has been exceptional.

Tips on Tipping

The hotel parking attendant who brings you your car should receive 30 to 50 pesos, particularly if he is likely to handle your car again. In parking lots outside the botel, 20 to 30 pesos is adequate. For an adult who offers to watch your car on the street, 50 pesos is generally appropriate (if be's still there when you re-turn). Gasoline station attendants usually get a small gratuity of 20 to 50 pesos.

If you commit a traffic infraction and are caught by the police, you may be asked, after an intimidating lecture in Spanish, Que hace-mos? — "What do we do?" This is a request for the unfortunately common Mexican tip known as a mordida. The government is trying to eliminate this bribery, but it persists. Sometimes, if you insist that the policeman write you a ticket or take you in the police station, the whole issue will be dropped. If this fails and your vacation plans do not include spending time in a Mexican court, mordidas commonly are a few bundred pesos, although tourists have been known to have been taken for as much as 2,000.

CANADA

When it comes to tipping, the watchword is 15 percent before taxes. The situation is generally consistent throughout Canada, with the exception of Montreal, where a few restaurants add a service charge. Menus in such establishments will clearly announce the charge, but it isn't a bad idea to check with the waiter.

Airport porters generally expect 75 cents to 1 Canadian dollar (60 to 75 U.S. cents) for medium-sized bags; doormen who simply get the bags out of a cah and into the hands of bellman usually get 1 dollar or maybe 2 if the bags are particularly numerous or heavy. Bellmen are generally happy with a 2-dollar tip, or I dollar a bag if you are traveling heavy. Experienced travelers often give 5 dollars if they plan a longer stay in a nice botel. The valer who picks up your laundry is happy with a 1dollar tip. Most people seem not in tip the mystery man who shines shoes overnight, but he would no doubt appreciate it.

Drivers get 10 percent and generally expect the passenger to round up to the next dollar.

Restaurants Though the guideline is 15 percent before

UNITED STATES

Tips have oot been replaced generally in the United States by the service charges usually applied in most other countries. Theoretically, you are free to assess the quality of service and reward it with generosity or parsimony. But this power coexists with Americans' uninhibitdness in discussing money. So be prepared to be reminded of your obligations.

In any case, tipping may be less of a problem than you fear because often you may oot be able to get any service at all, except from a machine (if it's not temporarily out of service). When Americans are available to provide service, however, they generally provide it cheerfully — and deserve to be apped well for it. Arrival/Hotel

If you are traveling by air, you probably won't have to worry about tipping a porter because you probably won't be able to find one. If a porter does materialize, be will charge a fixed rate, usually posted and usually $1 a bag. It costs extra if he finds a cab for you ahead of the crowd; pay for it to encourage this kind of imitative in the future.

At the hotel, tip everybody in sight on arrival. Word travels fast and it's good to make a promising impression How much? Think in terms of a dollar for normal service: unloading luggage, taking a bag upstairs, booking a restaurant table, delivering your laundry, shining your shoes. If you're staying in a small enough hotel so employees recognize you, tip once for several

Room-service waiters expect 15 percent (a dollar a drink is a good rule) and they prefer cash instead of having you write it on the bill. Room-cleaning staff do not expect gratuities except for special services. In a prestigious hotel, give the maid $10 a week.

Service is rarely added to the bill as a matter of course. Calculate 15 percent (in New York or Washington, insiders simply double the tax at the bottom of the bill) or as little as 10 percent if you've been really oeglected. If you want to make an impression, tip 20 percent. Give barmen up to a dollar for a round of drinks, a couple of dollars if he (or more often

Where Time Must Have a Start

by Susan Simpson

REENWICH, England — A brass strip cuts across the cobblestone countyard at the Old Royal Observatory in this placed town in suburban London. Straddle the strip and you'll have one foot in the Western Hemisphere and one foot in the Eastern: The brass marks the Greenwich meridian, the world's prime reference point for longitude and time. Every year, thousands of tourists trek through the Royal Park to the clump of buildings high on a hill where the path of the meridian, an imaginary line that arcs across the Earth from pole to pole, can be tracked. This year, visitors will arrive as an anniversary is celebrated. In October 1884, delegates at an international conference in Washington adopted the Greenwich meridian as longitude zero, hence the basis of the world's time zones.

"A hundred years later, 99 percent of the countries of the world use time zones based on the Greenwich meridian," says Carole Stott, curator of astronomy at the observatory, which is now a muscum. Long-distance travel and global communications are regulated by GMT, Greenwich Mean Time.

The delegates' choice at that Washington conference was not a hanhazard one. Greenwich had been associated with the study of longitude since the late 17th century, when Charles II had the Royal Observatory built there. In 1675, the king directed the first astronomer royal, John Flamsteed, to "apply himself with the most care and diligence to the rectifying of the tables of the motions of the heavens, and the places of the fixed stars, so as to find the so-much-desired longitude of places for the perfecting of the art of navigation."

At the time, scafarers could easily find their latitude, calculating how far north or south of the equator they were, but when it came to finding longitude, the east-west coordinates, they were literally at "To find longitude the astronomers' way, you need to know where the moon is, where the stars are, and you need to have the instruments that can do all the measurements for you," Stott says. "In the 17th century, they didn't have any of these. They knew in theory how to find longitude, but they couldn't do it in practice." The "so-much-desired" solution to the problem eluded the first astronomer royal and a number of his successors, although the long hours they spent making celestial observations and astronomical calculations gradually pushed out the frontiers of knowledge. The business of cataloging the heavens clearly did not appeal to everyone. The plaintive commentary of one assistant working in the 18th century is recorded in the old observatory: "Here forlorn, he spends days, weeks and months in the same long wearisome computations, without a friend to shorten the tedious hours or a soul with whom he can converse. He is also frequently up there three or four times in the night ... with owls perched on the fir trees in the park below, screaming by way of answer to him when he opens the sliding shutters in the roof of the building to make his observations."

In 1766, the terms of the directive issued by Charles II were met: The fifth astronomer royal, Nevil Maskelyne, produced the first Nautical Almanac, containing "the tables of the motions of the heavens" as ordered almost a century before. Used in tandem with the newly designed sextant, it allowed navigators to measure longitude at sea with relative ease and speed.

The almanac, published annually, was based on the Greenwich meridian. As more and more mariners began to use it, British mapand chart-makers adopted the same base. Since other maritime countries continued to use their own meridians and produce their own charts, some confusion reigned at sea for years.

An important element in determining longitude was finding the time and keeping it with precision. "That's really where the time factor fits in here," explains Stott. "It was almost a by-product of the work on longitude, although it's really what we're known for these

The invention of the chronometer, the sea clock, simplified navigators' work immensely. In 1883, a rather ingenious device to help them even more was set up at the Greenwich observatory. It was a time ball, said to be the world's first public time signal, erected on a turner at the observatory. Every day, at 1 P.M., a large red ball dropped down a pole. Navigators on their ships in the River Thames below would watch for the ball to fall, set their chronometers and go to sea with the accurate time. The absence of a standard time at sea remained a problem, But mariners' headaches paled in significance beside the severe difficulties with time differences ashore.

Communities kept their own times, and the regional differences could be marked. As Derek Howse relates in "Greenwich Time" (Oxford University Press), noon occurred in London 16 minutes efore it did in Plymouth but 5 minutes after it did in Norwich. The arrival of railway and telegraph companies exacerbated the problems. Howse quotes one railway official as complaining in the mid-1840s about "the baby born in London early on Saturday, the news of whose birth could be received in Dublin by telegraph oo Relief was at hand. In 1850, the seventh astronomer royal, Sir George Biddell Airy, installed the Transit Circle named after him at the observatory in Greenwich. It was a specialized telescope that measured the movements of stars, making it possible to determine time more accurately. In 1852, the first electric time signals were sent out in Britain. In 1880, Greenwich Mean Time became legal throughout the country and in 1884 it became the global reference point. After World War II. British astronomers left the smog of Greenwich behind and moved their operations to the Sussex countryside. The old observatory was fitted out with the instruments of the early stargazers and opened to the public as a museum in 1967. But some things haven't changed - the ungainly time ball still makes its daily journey down the pole at Greenwich.

There are London trains to Greenwich, leaving from Charing Cross Station, throughout the day. Or the river boat leaves from Charing Cross Pier, Victoria Embankment, approximately every half hour between 10:30 A.M. and 4:30 P.M.

Art and Multinationals

trasting this with the $1.5 billion spent in the United States, Tweedy says, "We would hope that more British firms would be more like IBM and United Technologies."

Sounding hopeful, he adds that similar spon-sorship organizations have sprung up in New Zealand, Canada. France, Italy and the Netherlands. "We still have a long way in go, but we sense the new interest is spreading. . . . We are planning to expand our own operations and move from Bath to London in early June."

This expansion embraces new areas of the globe. Exxon, which spends roughly $2 million supporting the arts around the world, is among a handful of U.S. companies increasingly ac-dive in Moslem countries and in Asia. Exxon was a leading supporter of an exhibition of Islamic art and artifacts that toured the United States for two years. And with Citibank, Exxon is sponsoring a series of concerts by the New fork Philharmonic in Singapore in September.

Multinacoual companies reflect differing styles and approaches to the arts. "We consider support of the arts part of our broader, corporate commitment to social responsi-bility," says Kaspar Cassani, chairman of IBM Europe. "It all has to do with the corporate image in the broadest sense, which means participating in our surrounding environment. and playing a role in it."

In Europe, IBM supports dozens of local events, such as the Glyndebourne opera festival in Britain, and some multinational events. such as a concert tour by the Orchestra of the 18th Century, which is based in Amsterdam and which plans to visit major European and U.S. cities this year.

IBM is regularly solicited for financial help. "We try to respond, but our approach is . . . not the sprinkler approach," Cassani says.

Art programs, such as sponsorship of the Bonnard show, are financed from IBM's "corporate responsibility" budget, covering the arts, sciences, medicine and humanitarian causes, such as helping the Red Cross in Stattgart buy an ambulance. This budget totals $115 million worldwide, with $25 million spent in Europe.

As is often the case, the financial support is not indispensable to the exhibit itself, "We would have done Bonnard anyway," says museum at the Pompidou Center, "but IBM's help, which originated in the United States and involved the Dallas Museum of Art and the Phillips Collection in Washington, [where the exhibition also will be shown is helping us do Bozo would like to see companies shift their support from exhibitions to what he terms longer-range, direct involvement" - specifically, to helping museums build collections. C ompanies generally get maximum mileage out of such high-profile events as the openings of art shows, which often are attended by high-ranking government officials, busi-ness and banking leaders, customers and influ-ential journalists. "This is useful, appreciated and classy," commented Raymond D'Argenio, United Technologies' senior vice president for communications, during the well-attended American art show opening. His company spends about $3.5 million in supporting the arts in the United States and abroad.

The catalog of American Folk Art, another United Technologies exhibition, was presented by President Ronald Reagan to each head of government attending the economic summit of industrialized nations in Williamsburg, Virginia, last year. "It was the official U.S. gift ... with a covering letter of introduction by our chairman, Harry Gray." D'Argenio says. "You simply cannot buy that kind of exposure." And when "Whistler's Mother," which the Louvre lent to the American art show, was design, a key factor in its marketing efforts.

We give the guarantees, the financing, but that is not all, since our computers are also used in the restoration efforts," says Paolo Viti, the company's director of design. "And when all the work is done, and people are viewing the results in museums around the world, we think the message gets across — that imaginative design in our products is linked to culture and the arts. It is a way of promoting the corporate

Then there is the Turmac approach. To improve the work environment for its employees. the Dutch tobacco company funds the Peter Stuyvesant Foundation, which has purchased and exhibits on its premises hundreds of contemporary paintings and sculptures by artists from 35 countries.

About 700 works are displayed at Turmac's cigarette factory in Zevenaar and at its headconarters in Amsterdam, and are rotated throughout the company's offices in Belgium, France and Switzerland.

"This effort elearly is not designed to get people to smoke more, nor to buy our cigarettes, and there are no tax advantages," says J.G. de Vos, who is in charge of the collection. Dow Sinks to a 15-Month Low

NEW YORK - A selloff of banking issues paced a broad retreat in stock prices Thursday, raising Wall Street's losses on paper to $75 billion over the past six sessions and dragging the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks to a 15-month low.

"In this market, greed has been extinguished and fear and panic has been substituted," said Robert Stovall, an analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

With more than 1,300 stocks falling in price, declines outpaced advances by better than 4-1 on the New York Stock Exchange. The NYSE's composite index of all its listed stocks fell 1.14 to 86.95.

The Dow Jones industrials fell 10.37 points to 1,103.43, bringing its losses to 49.73 points since May 16. It was the lowest close for Wall Street's best-known indicator since Feb 23, 1983, when the average stood at 1,096.94. An hour before the close, the stock market's best-known indicator briefly dipped below 1,100 before regaining some lost ground.

The latest worries to hit Wall Street centered on the financial system, with a dozen bank stocks falling to 52-week lows.

Last week, the government engineered a multi-billion dollar rescue operation for Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust, which had suffered a run on deposits amid concern over its stability.

And on Thursday, unsubstantiated rumors surfaced at home and abroad of new financial difficulties within the U.S. banking industry.

Continental Illinois slipped % to 8, and other big banks fell further.

Among banking institutions falling to new lows, Manufacturers Hanover, which denied there were any problems, plunged 3% to 27%.

Bank of Boston dropped 2 to 31%, Bankers

Trust fell 1% to 38, Chase Manhattan dropped 1 to 40%, Citicorp was off % at 29% and Security Pacific slid 14 to 414.

Meanwhile, the high level of interest rates remained as "the overriding factor in this mar-ket," said Hildegarde Zagorski, a market strategist at Prudential-Bache Securities.

Until interest rates retreat from current levels, bonds will remain more attractive than stocks and fears will build about the durability of the economic recovery, analysts said.

Esmark, which agreed to be acquired by Beatrice Foods for a sweetened bid of $60 a share, rose 1/8 to 581/2 to a 52-week high as the most active common stock as of the 4 p.m. EDT close of the NYSE. More than 2.7 million shares

Beatrice Foods was up ¼ to 28%. Meanwhile, a block of 3.75 million shares of Chrysler preferred stock traded at 23% a share, leaving that issue unchanged on the day.

international Business Machines, often a market leader because of its prominence in investment portfolios, slipped % to 107. Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 2.21 to 171.67, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was off 1.92 at 151,23. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 3.53 at 197.96. The NAS-DAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 235.39, down 4.19.

"SEVEN SISTERS"

The manic depressive nature of Wall Street mocks rational behavior. When energy equities were oozing near two year lows, our researchers mused... "Buying the Oils now, during the "glut", will prove as rewarding as having purchased Aero-Space stocks when the group was nose diving; when we were branded as mavericks in urging readers to accumulate BOEING below $ 19, and LOCKHEED around $ 48". (Boeing subsequently sold up to $ 49; Lockheed climbed to $ 140 before a 3-1 split).

On July 13 1983 C.G.R. commented: "GULF Oil. $ 37, has been buying in its own shares (book value $ 80) awaiting the inevitable day when the stock is peddled at dramatically higher prices". In 1984, Gulf surged to $ 80! Why is the "Crowd", and many of their gurus, oblivious to the truism that one should sell when the trumpets are blaring, and buy when the market is mute? The law of contrary reason triumphs. Calouste Gulbenkian, the legendary "Mr. 5%", was quoted as saving that "all oil friendships are greasy". Few can quibble with his cynicism; as "Mr. 5%", Calouste became a prototype of the Hollywood version of the late Peter Lorre, or Sidney Greenstreet; e multi-millionaire, exacting royalties from Mid-East oil producers for deals he structured between the "Seven Sisters" and Shelks.

Our bullishness towards emerging and senior energy stocks is pre-dicated upon the thesis that the "glut" will evaporate once the Sisters. spawn e series of events that will pyramid hydrocarbon prices. The "oil patch" is as Machiavellian now as it was following Colonel Drake's historic discovery in Titusville, Pennsylvania. The "Sisters", the international oil Amazons, have been dubbed "corporate courtesans", using any means to echieve their end. Our forthcoming report selects oil shares that may be acquired at premium prices.

in addition, we focus upon an incubating energy stock, NIGHTHAWK (V.S.E. symbol NHWV) that may catapult to prominence, emulating the success of some prior "special situations" that escalated 100% or more.

As a piece de resistance, we believe that CHIEF CONSOLIDATED MINING, $ 9 Pecific Coast Exchange, U.S. TOBACCO $ 45, and COLGATE PALMOLIVE $ 24, may be under informed accumulation as e possible prelude to predatory raids or friendly take-overs at sharply higher levels, in the same manner that C.G.R. predicted a fight for control for ENSTAR when EST was $ 12. The shares sold up to $ 211/2 in a brief time span.

European Firms Cautious About Factories in Space

By PAUL LEWIS

New York Times Service

TRESA, Italy — When Professor Luigi Napolitano, an Italian physicist, lectured here recently on manufacturing in outer space, he began by recalling all the famous scientists who had said that trans-Atlantic air travel, television and space flight were impossible dreams.

For while the idea of building "factories in space" is filling European governments with enthusiasm, Europe's industrialists are still waiting to be convinced that it will make sense and

Professor Napolitano was speaking at a conference called to review preliminary results from Europe's $2.5-billion bid for world leadership in the new technology of manufacturing indus trial goods in outer space.

This field was opened last November when the U.S. space shuttle Challenger lannched into orbit Spacelab. the West's first manned space laboratory, which was built mainly by West Germany, Italy and France. Its purpose was

Skylab is expected to produce valuable new processes for manufacturing to allow scientists to test their belief that certain products, chiefly biomedical substances, spe cial alloys and crystals, can be made better in the weightless, bacteria-free environment of space than on earth.

The conference here attracted many representatives of the big European aerospace companies, such as West Germany's MBB, France's Aerospatiale, Italy'a Aeritalia and British Aerospace, which helped build Spacelab. They look forward one day to selling industrialists a new generation of "space factories" that would make products while orbiting the earth.

But absent from the meeting were the big European pharmacentical and electronics companies, which would supposedly be the main gainers from all the costly space manufacturing research that their governments are financing.

"There is very little interest yet from user industries, either here or in the United States," said Yves Demerliac, secretary general of Eurospace, the association of European space industries that organized the Stresa conference.

D espite industry's wait-and-see approach to manufacturing in space, European governments spent about $1 billion building Spacelab, twice the original estimate, with West Germany paying 55 percent, Italy 18 percent and France 10 percent. The Soviet Union is already investigating space manufacturing with its manned. Soyuz spacelab station. And now the United States, whose interest in space technology has mainly centered on rocketry and satellites, plans to leap-frog the field with the launching by 1991, at a cost of $8 billion, of the world's first permanent manned space station.

Nonetheless, Europe is struggling to keep abreast. Next month, West Germany and Italy are expected to accept the public invitation that President Ronald Reagan extended to Europe to participate in the space station program. They want other European countries to join them in building a $300-million research capsule, called Columbus, which would be attached to the larger

In 1985, West Germany plans another largely German-financed Spacelab flight, launched by Challenger, to continue its research into space manufacturing. And in 1987, West Germany, Italy, France and other European nations hope to launch the European Remevable Carrier, known as Eureca, a fully automatic laboratory that will be sent into space to perform experiments and then be brought back to earth.

Scientists addressing the Eurospace conference acknowledged that the full results from the Spacelab experiments will take years to assess. But they were generally optimistic about what they had discovered so far.

earch has yielded rich commercial results in satellite communications, meteorology and mineral prospecting, they argued, current research into the behavior of materials under conditions of prolonged weightlessness, or "microgravity," will produce valuable new industrial techniques.

Aiready, they believe that a new generation of ultra-powerful microchips could be built around the flawless crystals that can be grown in space. In addition, they say, the highly accurate separa-tion of cells and chemical substances possible under "microgra-vity" might make space an ideal place for manufacturing new

Funding For World Bank Lifted

Accord Elevates Japan's Status

By Hobart Rowen

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The World Bank's executive directors Thursday recommended that the bank's capitalization be increased by $8.4 billion on a selective basis, to approximately $95 billion, allowing a realignment of shares that will elevate Japan to the rank of second largest contributor behind the United States.

At the same time, the board of directors, as expected, agreed on a $9 billion, three-year replenish-ment of funds for the International Development Association — the soft-loan program for poor nations known as IDA-7.

The announcements were techni cally separate ones, but were linked by the new status for Japan. In exchange for increasing Japan's share from 4.58 percent to 4.99 percent, Japan agreed to boost its dol-lar contribution to IDA to $1.68 billion, or 18.7 percent, a significant increase from the 14.7 percent commitment it had made to IDA-6.

The IDA agreement is $3 billion below the $12 billion that had originally been negotiated for IDA-6 in January 1980 and $7 billion below the amount that the World Bank management had originally tried to arrangefor IDA-7. The money will be committed to top priority projects in the poorest countries beginning July 1.

IDA credits are for 50 years, interest-free, except for a modest service charge. As of mid-1983, IDA had extended $30 billion for development projects, most of which has gone to 40 countries with an annual per capita income of $410 or less.

The Japanese share of 18.7 percent is second to the U.S. share of percent, down from 27 percent for IDA-6. Other large contributors are West Germany, 12.5 per-cent, and the United Kingdom, 10.1 percent. There are 33 donor com-

The realignment of shares in the selective capital increase for the bank, which typically goes in tan-dem with quota increases in the International Monetary Fund, will reduce the U.S. share from 20.22 percent to 20.01 percent. Thus, the United States will retain its ability to veto projects.

West Germany is fractionally behind Japan, with an increase from the next few weeks, bank officials an increase for France and a decline for the United Kingdom brought those two countries into a shared fourth position at 4.76 per-

The most recent general capital increase for the bank was $40 billion in 1980, which represents ap-proximately a doubling of the bank's capital at that time.

For British Potters, Recovery Painful Stepped-Up Automation Adds to the Sting of Lost Jobs

By Barnaby J. Feder

New York Times Service STOKE-ON-TRENT, England -- Britain's venerable ceramics industry, chastened by the impact of recession and the loss of export markets when the pound shot up with oil prices in 1979, is now working ou several fronts to stimulate its recovery. The companies here in North Staffordshire are keeping a closer watch on overseas competitors, paying more attention to the tastes of trend-setting U.S. consumers, stepping up marketing and increasing their investments in antomation.

The last element is depressing oews here in The Potteries, as the region including this city of 250,000 and the oeighboring towns is known. The region, which produces a range of items from fine china to toilet bowls, accounts for more than 80 percent of the British ceramies industry's $700million output. In terms of profitability, the recovery set in a year ago. But with more than 40 factories permanently closed and many of the survivors turning to labor-saving technology, officials at the Ceramic and Allied Trades Union see little likelihood of employment ever being much higher than 40,000

Such cutbacks carry an extra psychic cost here. Traditions have been built up and handed down over the centuries by master potters like Josiah Wedgwood, creating a distinctive cultural heritage that makes The Potteries, in the words of one local executive, "a time capsule between Birmingham

The directors of Enstar have approved the merger agreement and have recommended that Enstar shareholders accept the offer.

Charter Posts Loss Of $36 Million

Thursday of more than $36 million for the first quarter. It said addi-tional losses and possible elimina-tion of stockholder equity could occur in the second quarter.

The diversified company said the first-quarter loss did not take into account devaluations that may have occurred in the wake of its reorganization filing last month. In the 1983 first quarter, the company earned $952,000.

Charter's first-quarter revenue rose 33 percent to $1.6 billion from

Continental Weighs Plan to Spin Off Bad

By James L. Rowe

CHICAGO - Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. is pursuing a plan to transfer its had assets into a separate company and then find investors to inject oew capital into the surviving bank.

Continental's chairman, David G. Taylor, confirmed Wednesday that the troubled institution had been looking for such an alternative for several months — long be-fore a massive run on the bank began earlier this month. He said he hoped that such a move would preclude the need to merge Continental into a healthier bank.

But Mr. Taylor said in an interview that the "reputation and credibility" of the eighth-biggest U.S. bank was at such a low ebb that depositors might not believe that the assets remaining in Continental were all healthy.

"People are likely to say What comes after that?" Mr. Taylor said. Such an attitude, he said, would make it difficult to find depositors for Continental regardless condition led to the run on the current shareholders would have to bank and forced the federal gov-ernment to launch a $7.5-billion rescue operation last week to keep the bank alive until a "perma solution" could be found to its financing problems.

Mr. Taylor said Wednesday that the rescue operation - a joint action between the federal regulators and commercial banks - has begun to calm the money markets in the United States, Europe and Asia where Continental raises about 90 percent of its funds. Continental has $41.4 billion in assets and needs to borrow about $8 billion

Investment banking sources said that they thought that a spin-off mancuver, while feasible, would be harder to accomplish as a result of the run and the resulting increase in depositor wariness about Conti-

Warner Chief's Remarks Seen As Hint of Selling Operations

By Michael Schrage Washington Post Service

LOS ANGELES - The chairman of Warner Communications Inc., Steven J. Ross, has told shareholders at the annual meeting here that 1983 was "the most difficult year in our 22-year history," and that the company was trying to strategically redeploy its assets.

Sources close to top Warner management said the statement was an indication that the company welcomed the move and said it was is seeking to sell several of its operconsistent with its policy of encour-

Warner reportedly is looking for a buyer for its Philadelphia-based Franklin Mint mail-order distribution subsidiary, and is recvaluating its ownership of the New York Cosmos soccer team and its stake in the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team. The company recently sold its cosmetics subsidiary to Cosmair, a French cosmetics concern.

Warner lost aboot $418 million in 1983, primarily because of its Atari Inc. video-games and homecomputer subsidiary, and Mr. Ross indicated that the company would show a loss for the first half of this year as well. It had a profit of nearly $258 million in 1982.

This year, Mr. Ross said, "will be a crucial year of transition for the company.... We are reshaping and repositioning the company for re-newed profitability."

The company's Warner-Amex cable venture, owned jointly with American Express, is discussing possible sale of several of its municipal cable-television franchises. Earlier this year, the company sold its Pittsburgh cable franchise for

There also were reports that

Warner is negotiating with Philip. NV. the giant Dutch electronic company, to have it take an equity position in Atani. Mr. Ross de clined Wednesday to discuss the negotiations. However, he did say that "there will be major changes made at Atari." And a spokesman indicated that there would be more management layoffs at the troubled company over the next several months as it tries to return to prof-

The Warner meeting saw the election of Chris Craft Industries chairman Herbert Siegel to Warner's board of directors. Through Chris Craft, Mr. Siegel is Warner's single largest shareholder, owning about 29 percent of the company's stock.

bolized Warner's costly victory over the Australian media baron, Rupert Murdoch, in his efforts to ire Warner Communications. The takeover effort was marked by lawsuits and personal insults exchanged between Mr. Murdoch and Warner representatives.

To stop Mr. Murdoch's disrup-tive influence, Mr. Ross said, Warner purchased Mr. Murdoch's stake in the company for $172.7 million in March. The purchase gave Mr. Murdoch a $40 million profit on his five-month investment, and Warner also agreed to pay Mr. Murdoch $8 million expense-related fees.

Much of the capital invested by sound assets, such as government current shareholders would have to bonds, to make the plan attractive be used to underwrite the new company that would assume most or all Continental's $2.3 billion in problem loans. Many of those loans would be collected, either in part or in full, but at present they are a big drag -about $200 million before taxes on the Chicago bank's annual results. Investment banking sources here said that a major New York familiar with it, was that the resecurities firm was interested in set-structured Continental - with new

The Trib's new guide for business travel brims with valuable information

There's never been a guide quite like it. Thirteen European business cities, analysed in detail according to a business traveler's wants and needs. It's the key to turning that ordinary business trip into a more pleasant, more officient journey.

Seven subdivisions under each city include: 1. Basic city overview with vital information. 2. Hotels, with emphasis on business services. 3. Restaurants, for on and off-duly pleasure. 4. After hours suggestions. 5. Diversions, from grand opera to jogging. 6. Shopping. 7. Weekending ideas.

7. Weekending ideas.

Trib business readers all across Europe shared their most treasured travel secrets with journalist Peter Graham. The result: a book for business travelers with contributions from business travelers. Over 200 pages, this hardcover edition is available directly from the Trib. A great gift idea for colleagues, business contacts, or yourself. Order today.

GATT Says World Trade Volume Rose 2% in '83

GENEVA - After two years of decline, global trade rose in volume by 2 percent in 1983, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade oping countries, including a 25reported Thursday.

Bot there was also a 2-percent decline in the value of world com-merce to an estimated $1.81 trillion because of the stronger U.S. dollar and declining oil prices, GATT said in its annual report.

In 1984, the report predicted, global trade is likely to rise in voltime by 5 to 6 percent. But the in the industrial countries in 1983 study warned that governments rose by 2 percent after a decline of study warned that governments still had to solve the "fundamental problems" of world debt and infla-

This was balanced, however, by production increases of 5 percent in the other developing countries and of 3 percent in the industrial oil-producing nations, GATT said. Should the World Bank innovation be applied to all its co-financing arrangements with commercial banks, some of the sting of higher rates could be removed, analysts

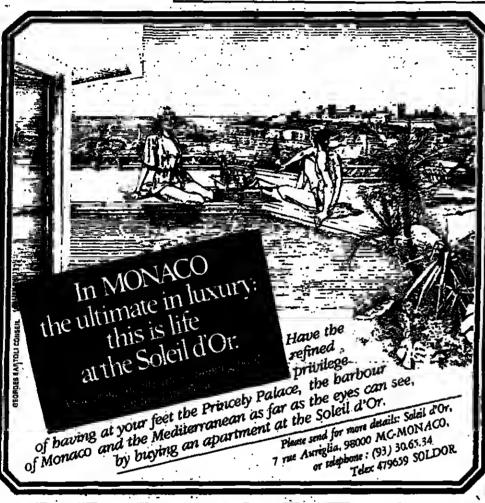

Mr. Stern of the World Bank said the plan could also be a model in the negotiations under way be-tween many debtor countries and lenders for a liberalization of loan terms. In 1983 some 30 developing countries, including 5 of the 10 largest borrowers, completed or were engaged in debt-rescheduling with official or commercial bank creditors. The external debt of these countries totaled more than $400 billion.

The World Bank plan also pre-serves a distinction between interest and principal that many combankers consider important Instead of accumulating the additional interest as rates rise and converting it to principal at the end of the loan - a process that banks call capitalizing interest - the additional interest would be paid within the fixed installments. with the amortization share of the fixed payment reduced. Thus, it would be principal that is deferred.

THE old time "cutting session" was a hardhirting contact sport. Jazz can be a mara-thon with a locker-room atmosphere. The men want to prove they can thrive under tough physical conditions. They try to play longer, faster, harder. Somy Rollins played nonstop four-hour times.

A subtler, more aesthetic face exists also, but the prevalent macho ambience until recently generally excluded women, and discriminate against the women it did include.

Reading Linda Dahl's book, you discover that women in jazz have been invisible in the same sense as Raiph Elison's blacks in "The Invisible Man." A faded photo of the Young family band hits particularly hard. The mother, two cousins, a sister and little Lester are all playing saxophones. You wonder if Cousin Boots's wife, for example, might have grown into another Lester Young under a more demo-cratic system. You wonder about all the potential Charlie Parkers who gave up in frustrated, obscure poverty.

The well known singer and performer
Blanche Calloway was passed over when a big booker decided to build a band for the Cotton Club around her younger brother, Cab. Later she formed her own band with Vic Dickerson, Ben Webster and Cozy Cole, who said: "We thought the band was great." Blanche declared ankruptcy in 1938.

Dahl writes. The assumption about women in jazz is that there weren't any, because jazz was by definition a male music. Therefore, women could not play it. Therefore, they did not do so. When confronted by women who belied the assumptions, women who competently played trumpets, saxophones, drums, a deaf ear was turned." This unexplored subject has wider social implications. There are rich buried veins to probe and savor. Just what is "feminine" and savor. Just what is "feminine" anyway? Isn't Chet Baker's style "feminine." Why are there so few homosexuals in jazz. Why did Lester Young call everybody "Lady"? A comparison with women in rock and classical music — and other arts for that matter — would be helpful. Unfortunately Dahl does not probe very deeply, and her prose is anything

The singer Sheila Jordan comes across as an interesting creative human being coping with difficult environmental problems, only one of which is gender. The trombonist Melba Liston and the pianist-composers Mary Lou Williams and Carta Bley are female instrumentalists who have turneserved respect, and Dahl's interviews with them are revealing. Bley, who says "I never had any problem, and that's the truth. . . I hate to be in a book about women, raises a compowersal point when she comments: "Maybe not many [women] were very good." Her sense of humor is both rare and helpful. She was married to Paul Bley, whom she credits with launching her career. Paul's second wife, Annette Peacock, also became a composer while with him. When an interviewer mentions that his wife could not write a note of music, Carla suggests: "Why don't you lend her to Paul Bley for a month?" But Buddy Rich once said: "I would never hire a chick for my band," and it must be difficult for a talented woman struggling against that sort of mind-set to be amused. Or to keep from reverse racism.

Dottie Dodgiou's story is a reassuring affirmation of mutual interdependance, and evi-dence that the relationship between the sexes in the world of jazz has improved: "When I first started out, lerry [her ex-husband, a saxophonist] encouraged me to become a drummer, He helped carry my drums a lot. . . With Larry Bird was at the center of nearly every one of the Celtics' dazzling fast breaks, Boston used a three-minute spurt in the quarter to put away the Bucks.

The streak began with two free throws by Dennis Johnson. But then came a fast break in swhich every Celtic on the floor touched the ball and which ended with Cedric Maxwell feeding Robert Parish for a jam. Bird hit a three-point shot, Johnson scored on a fast break and, finally, Bird rebounded his own shot and scored on a reverse layup.

There's not a lot of strategy you can employ after the kind of run the Celtics put together in the third period," Milwaukee's Junior Brideman said of Boston's 11-0 surge. "You just hope to make a shot or could. I have no complaints. We

Rockets Win Toss for No. 1 NBA Pick

NEW YORK - The Houston Rockets have won the coin flip with Portland Trail Blazers for the first pick in the National Basketball Association draft on June 19.

The Rockets will pick Akeem Olajuwon, a 7-foot (2.13-meter) center from the University of Honston. Olajuwon, a native of Nigeria, would team with 7-4 Ralph Sampson, the first pick in last year's draft. The Trail Blazers also were hoping to pick Olajuwon. After losing Wednesday's coin toss, Portland's general manager, Stu Inman, said that he is now leaning to Sam Bowie, a 7-1 center from Kentucky. But Larry emberg, the Portland owner, said no decision has been made and hinted that the team might draft North Carolina guard Michael Jordan.

For the Bucks, the loss was any thing but an embarrassment. They avoided a sweep by winning in Milwankee on Monday and, ultimately, could not hope to keep pace with Boston. But they stayed in the game to the end, never allowing Boston to rest on its lead.

Bob Lanier exemplified just bow much the Bocks want to win. Lanier used his massive body to rebound, score and bump away as many driving Celtics as he could. Lanier even had a spectacular block on Parish that stunned the younger, springier player.

"We played as good a game as we can play tonight," Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson said. "In the two games in Milwaukee and this game, we played as hard as we

Players Accept, but Owners Balk at Drug Abuse Accord

NEW YORK - The tentative agreement reached three weeks ago by a joint owner-union committee on how to deal with drug dependency has received overwhelming ratification from the players in major league baseball. But continuing opposition by some team owners, several of whom think that the accord lacks sufficient disciplinary provisions, makes its future uncertain.

br, the acting executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, said Wednesday that "approximately 97 percent" of the union's members had voted by secret ballot for ratification. But he said that a vote by the owners scheduled for Thursday in Chicago had been indefinitely postponed and that the union had received nn explanation.

"I cannot predict what they will do," Fehr said, "but, if the owners do oot ratify, the effect would be bad, considering the favorable response of the players and the fact that the agreement was endorsed by everyone on a committee" that included representatives of the owners and Lee MacPhail, head of the Player Relations Committee. MacPhail, whose committee represents the owners in their bergaining with the union, confirmed that the vote had been postponed.

"In view of the seriousness of the issue, we are hoping to get a unified response," be said. "At present, the owners are pretty well split and I couldn't predict if it would pass." He said that some owners do not completely understand the plan, while others are opposed to it because "they feel it is not strong enough."

MacPhail-said that he would call a Player Relations Committee meeting, to be held in about two weeks, to determine how to proceed.

'Take Me to the Kitchen'

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — I'm a kitchen person. When invited to somebody's house, I get uneasy at being ushered into the parlor and urged to sit down. In the world I come from, the parlor was the room where the dead were laid out for burial.

Usually, of course, the people who invite you want only to show off the parlor. It has just been redecorated, or there's a new rug they're proud of. Maybe an expensive lamp designed by an artist in Milan. After passing the appropriate compliments, it may be all right to get up and move around.

If so, I rise quickly and roam toward the kitchen. Nnt without worrying that I've messed up the parlor, though I know I've deated the couch cushions by sitting on them. I hope my trousers haven't left any dust on the upholstery. In the world I come from, people who dented the parlor couch cushions and left dusty imprints on the furniture were almost as odious as people who rested the backs of their heads on the chair fabric and left hair-oil stains.

It is only in the kitchen that I can feel at home. It ought in be a kitchen hig enough to hold a table so you can play pinochle or do the crossword puzzle while the cooking is going on. It ought to have a radio that can pick up a baseball game, a bowl full of cake icing convenient for finger dipping, and a stock of fresh celery and rat cheese within easy reach of the pinochle game. For perfection I would add (I) a squalling child or twn who can be told to shut up or be banished to the parfor, (2) a telephone that rings nff and on with pleas from relatives hoping to cadge money and (2) a cool to cadge that the and (3) a cook snarling that the table isn't going to be fit to eat on if the cardplayers don't stop spilling

As a kitchen person, I may be thought hard to please, at least by dining-room people. Dining-room people ascribe great importance to heavy silver, heavy linen and heavy crystal. Evenings at their houses are exercises in weight lifting. What's worse, they live in con-stant fear: fear that bandits are shatter a valuable glass and stain the priceless linen.

Once when I was young, poor and without prospects of succe friend who knew how in get ahead brought a rich contractor to my place, thinking this plutocrat might take to my charms and offer me a profitable job.

Later I learned he had such a juh to offer, he needed a man of the world to bribe members of the legislature. I showed my imposing guest to the kitchen, sat him down conveniently close to the celery and rat cheese, and served him a bourbon and ginger ale in a jelly glass.
"You don't serve drinks in a jelly glass," my friend groaned afterward, but I'm not sure this was why the jub wasn't offered. I think it was because of the silverware I set before him, a fork filched from a Greyhound Terminal lunchroom and a tin spoon bent out of shape

Parlor people, I know, have passed the word that I am simply "unpresentable." I believe this verdict was first circulated by Walter Lippmann, a man of immense charm and cultivation, who invited me for dinner when I was still ambitious to scale the social heights of

We both recognized immediately that rooms divided us. Lippmann instantly saw that I was a kitchen person; and I - sadly, because I worshipped Lippmann - knew at once that he was a parlor person. A polished host, Lippmann of-fered to show his house almost as soon as I entered and, after looking into his library, I said, "Where's the That noble face did not flicker, but I could tell instantly that Lipp-mann was astounded and puzzled.

It took me a second or two more to realize that Lippmann had only the vaguest notion of where his kitchen was located. He did find it after a search, though, and we stepped through the door. The people working there stared in amazement, occasioned, I suppose, by the shock of seeing twn strange men wander-

He was a splendid man, but he was a parlor man, and I was a kitchen man and, being a wise man he did not invite me again. For

Woman in a leotard stands at the juice bar in an East Side bealth club, enjoying some lowfai Dutch Apple yogurt. A hand-some, sweaty stranger with really good delioid definition sidles up and orders carob peanuts and freshly squeezed grapefruit juice, large. He turns slowly, looks her in the eyes, and speaks. "Yogurt is mucous forming," he says. "My name is Sharon," she replies.

They repaired to their respective locker rooms for grooming and departed healthily into the night from the Vertical Club, a celebrity-studded health club that has become much more serving not only the physical conditioning needs but, members say, also the social, psychological, occasionally professional and even spiritual needs of the Upper

"We have no fat people here," says Tom DiNatale, the manager.
"People join other health clubs to here," explains Heidi Halliday, a supervisor at the club. "The Vertical Club is today's Studin 54." says High Voltage, a hybrid of the show business and physical conditioning industries, with glit-ter in her hair and sequined leg warmers. "Same people; same scene," she says. "Only positive instead of destructive. People are getting up when they used to go to bed. 5 A.M. I was there."

As an aerobics instructor to the stars here, she has become something of a celebrity in her own right. She always gets the best table at Elaine's, She has the disconcerting habit of constantly doing stretching exercises, even Michael Rodriguez, an assistant manager at the club, sits calmly cutting up little white slips of paper in the center of a vast, open room aflutter with bundreds of exercise disciples. "Pure Fel-lini," remarks Ron Haase, a program director. The gleaming room of mirrored walls and wraparound neon is filled with energizing rock music - "You might

Members at the Vertical Club: Get in shape before you join.

The club membership grunts, discreetly, on more than 250 of the latest chrome exercise machines, kept glistening by a squad of cleaning personnel. The members jog on a bouncy track that seems almost to run for them. They furiously pedal exercise bi-cycles, with digital calorie burnrate readouts. An already anatomically correct club member, Leslie Arden, pedals wildly toward her goal of looking great in her swimming suit on Memorial Day at Southampton.

Rodriguez is a gregarious, 20-year-old conditioning expert who is attending to the important task of replenishing the little white slips of paper at the desk. He said the exercisers keep coming over and grabbing them in their sweaty hands and scribbling down the names and telephone numbers of someone they have just met who can be useful to them -socially or professionally or in providing the name of a good plumber. People see someone they like," said Rodriguez, "and they ask me things like the person's name, telephone number, job. marital status, sexual preference, whether they rent or own in the Hamptons, things like

Although there are hundreds of bers said space at make-up members. Rodriguez happens to know the answers. Through his orientation sessions at the club, he gets in know all of the members, who he said range from models and athletes serious about exercise to socialites and dirty old men whose attitude is one of cardio-schmardio, where are the dancing aerobics girls? the vogue.

Some club members say health clubs are replacing the networking function of the old men-only clubs. Jack Krenek, a model, attests to this, saying he met his accountant here as well as his insurance man and an advertising executive who gave him a modeling job.

Theresa Echeverry, an admirer of his, is a 25-year-old restaurant bostess who comes to the club during the day. "That," said Rodriguez, "is when I advise women looking for rich men to come."
He tells of several members who scrimped and saved for the S1,150 to join in hopes that they might find a well-to-do mate here. Several members remarked that the cloakroom at the club looks like a fur vault in the win-

Echeverry says she is weighing several offers from fellow exercis-ers for lunch this day. Putting her arms around the owner of two restaurants, she said, "Everyone around here owns something." Phil Suarez, co-owner of Bob Giraldi Productions, quipped, "Guys can't get on the elevator with her unless you make seven figures."

"People come to see and be seen," DiNatale said of his club, where even the sauna has glass walls. There is also a communal spa, a bar and restaurant, and a rooftop sunning area for socializ-

"It is better socially than a singles bar because it's not so obvi-ous," said Arden. "You also don't meet as many low-life creeps and insistent drunks. It's safer. The only problem here is that a lot of these people look like they'd rather go home and look at themselves than somebody else."

A judge on Wednesday declared the candy heiress Helen Vorbees Brack legally dead as of February 1977, the month she disappeared, paving the way for the settlement of her estate. Brach's will, which names her brother, Charles Vorhees, as the recipient of a $500,000 trust fund, was filed with the court after the raing by Judge Heavy Budzinski in Chicago. The will also designated that a $50,000 trust fund be established for Brach's driver and handyman, Jack Matlick, at one time a suspect in her disappearance. The investigation into her disappearance was closed with no charges filed. The estate is valued at up to $30 million. Most of it will go to the care and protection of animals as part of the Helen kept buying and selling stocks with sions on her $400,000 investment.
